NUNGESSER-COLI FIND PROVES A HOAX

ACCOUNTANT SENDS STORY TO RELIEVE THE MONOTONY

Of Life In a Lumber Camp In the Northern Wilds of Quebec—The Hopes of the World and a Sad Waiting Mother Cruelly Dashed To the Earth By the Thoughtlessness of a Bookkeeper Who Had Ennui.

Just to relieve the monotony of life in the lumber camp village of Chiconutimi, in northern Quebec, an accountant named A. Blais telephoned to River Bend, more than a hundred miles north of Quebec Wednesday reporting that the missing French fliers, Charles Nungesser and Francis Coli, had been found.

The report was soon relayed to Quebec and from there it was telegraphed and cabled to all parts of the world.

Blais was located by the United Press Wednesday night. He admitted he had perpetrated the hoax "just to relieve the monotony of life." The idea suggested itself to him, he added, by reports that flares had been sighted in the region of the camps of the Price Brothers Lumber company for whom Blais works.

The flares, it was learned Wednesday night, were a part of a store of such signals stolen recently from the Roberval aerial station and set off at intervals during the last few weeks for the sake of amusement.

On the basis of the confession by Blais, the Provincial government announced Wednesday night it would call off its plans to send airplanes into the north woods to search for the fliers. Instructions were issued to forestry men, nevertheless, to keep a close watch over the entire district for the missing Frenchmen.

A wave of intense excitement swept thru Quebec late Wednesday when a report came in from River Bend, in the interior of the province that the French aviators Nungesser and Coli had been found.

Immediately the Quebec authorities and the lumbermen initiated searching inquiries; the Canadian railway, telegraph and telephone services issued instructions to probe all reports to the bottom; search parties were organized, and the district for many miles around was thoroughly combed.

Word of Nungesser and Coli spread with startling swiftness; it was that they had been found on Ship Shaw river, a tributary of the Saguenay east by south of Lake St. John.

The Provincial government had received no confirmation of any report beyond that which said lights had been observed. Government officials counsel caution in accepting as true reports that the flares were sent up by Nungesser and Coli for it is realized that other agencies might have been responsible for them.

HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATE.

Miss Mary Albertine Patton, a granddaughter of Mrs. Carrie A. Patton, of this city, was one of the graduates at the commencement held by the North High school at the coliseum, Columbus, Wednesday evening, June 15, at which nearly twenty-five thousand people gathered. There were 540 graduates from this high school alone. Her grandson, Louis Patton, was also promoted from the eighth grade to the first year high school, from the Indianola school.

BRIEFLY TOLD

—Grover Moore has secured a position with the Industrial Commission Columbus.

The entire Chiconutimi district was converted into a camp of willing watchers and searchers and nothing will be left undone to trace the source of the lights.

Nungesser and Coli left Paris May 8, in an attempt to make a nonstop flight to New York. They never were heard from after they started out across the ocean and it was believed that they had either fallen into the almost untraveled waters of the chilly north Atlantic or had come down in some uninhabited part of Newfoundland or Labrador with their goal almost in sight.

The first word suggesting that the fliers might have landed in Canada instead of Newfoundland was the fake report that flares, as the set off to call for assistance, had been seen in the Seguenay region.

REFERENDUM BILL KILLED IN ILLINOIS

Down State Solons Win Over Chicago Wets in Battle For Prohibition Law.

After more than three hours of acrimonious debate, which at one time almost precipitated a fist encounter, the Illinois senate Wednesday afternoon killed the Weber-O'Grady bill providing for a state referendum on repeal of the state prohibition law.

The veto was 17 to 33. The house had previously passed the measure, 80 to 63.

The debate was purely a Chicago-down-state battle. The wet Chicago delegation stood firm in the veto, as did the opposing faction, with one exception—Senator John Dailey of Peoria, who said he felt the proposed referendum would be worth while.

After Senator Denvir charged that Senator Andrew Cuthbertson of Bunker Hill, a leading speaker against the bill, had been receiving money from the Anti-Saloon League for making dry speeches before farmers' organizations, the latter jumped to his feet and called his accuser a "contemptible liar."

Charges and counter-charges flew back and forth, but what seemed a certain fist encounter did not materialize.

Johnson's "Odd" Habit Proved His Greatness

According to the greatest of all biographers, Boswell, Doctor Johnson, upon entering a library, "ran eagerly to one side of the room, intent on poring over the backs of books, says a writer in "Private Book Collectors." Because of this custom a contemporary once called him "odd," to which accusation Johnson replied: "Sir, the reason is very plain. Knowledge is of two kinds. We know the subject ourselves, or we know where we can find information upon it. When we inquire into any subject the first thing we have to do is to know what books have treated of it. This leads us to look at catalogues and the backs of books in libraries." No wonder that such a man knew so well how and where to tap the sources of knowledge and give the world a great and unique dictionary.

THE SUPREME COURT ON APPLICA- TIONS FOR REVIEW

Does the supreme court of the United States grant or deny applications for review in an arbitrary way, without any genuine examination into the particular merits of each application? According to a statement made by Chief Justice Taft the other day, just before leaving Washington for his summer home at Murray Bay, there is an impression more or less widely current that such is the case.

Naturally, the chief justice is unwilling that such an impression, once known to exist, should be allowed to go without denial. The thoughtful person will see at once that it contains an imputation against the court's conception of its official duty in the matter concerned. The court has a discretionary jurisdiction as to the granting of reviews, not being obliged to review any case simply because a request to do so has been made; but the decision in each case must be a matter of real discretion, not an arbitrary choice. There must be, and there is, a careful examination of the briefs, petitions and records involved in these matters of certiorari jurisdiction; and this examination, says Mr. Taft, "is not a mere superficial glance, but a real analysis of each case."

Every such case is called by the chief justice in conference, after the several justices have examined the briefs and the records, and their separate findings are discussed. A vote is then taken, and if four justices favor granting the review the writ of certiorari is issued. All this is just as it should be, and one may add that the names of the men who compose the supreme court should be taken by the public as a sufficient guarantee that these requirements of judicial propriety are not neglected.—Columbus Dispatch.

MUSEUM CURATOR TRACES DADDIES OF "WILD" HORSES

Tells of Antediluvian Steeds That Never Knew Bridle and Were Mysteriously Slain.

Washington.—Out in the West where they have roamed the ranges for years, wild horses are being rounded up for extinction.

These thousands never have known bridle nor rider and have obeyed only the laws of nature, but are not "wild" at all—in the scientific sense.

They're merely tame, domesticated equines "gone native," as it were.

Back long before the first red-skinned Americans made their appearance, this country was full of real "wild horses," ancestors of the western ponies now being caught for disposition.

These real wild horses had lived and died—killed off in some strange way unknown to science—in a geologic age antedating the human age.

Dr. James W. Gidley, assistant curator of vertebrate paleontology of the United States National museum, is just back from Florida, where he came across the bones of scores of these animals. The country is full of such fossils, he says, even as Europe and other parts of the world are.

"Geologic records show these earlier horses were far more numerous and diversified in kind than the horses of today," said Doctor Gidley, in relating their story.

"Going backward in time, they are seen to be less and less like their living successors, although they all possess certain characteristics of body structure that stamp them as belonging to the same natural group of animals."

Our own old dobbie is really an "import." His immediate ancestors were brought from Europe with the first Spaniards to visit this country, soon after Columbus arrived, and the European horses of that time came from an Asiatic stock, that, in turn, came from some species of this geologic wild horse.

Negroes' Ark Refuses to Float During Flood

Memphis, Tenn.—Exhorted by their parson, a community of negroes in the lowlands near Parkin, Ark., emulated the example of Noah when they heard the flood was approaching and hastily built an ark. Into the crude vessel they crowded themselves and all their worldly belongings, including chickens, dogs, cats and mules. While they waited for the flood they prayed and rejoiced.

The flood came, but the ark refused to float. Water poured in from a hundred leaks in the uncalculated hull, and with the flood a foot and a half deep on the floor of the flat-bottomed craft its occupants fled to a railway embankment.

What One's Fiance Is For

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

TOM GILBERT was always thankful that he had been standing in the doorway of his shop when the incident, just outside, took place.

He watched the girl, as he had many times watched her, while she put a great bundle of magazines in the mail box which was on the sidewalk just in front of his shop.

While Gilbert gazed at her, quite satisfied with her from the tips of her well-shod feet to the mass of red-gold hair, his expression suddenly darkened.

He saw a good-looking man approaching the mail box, most obviously intent on a flirtation with the girl.

Gilbert never knew exactly how it happened, but what he did see was the bundle of magazines bumped out of the girl's arms and a swift stooping of both the man and the girl to pick them up.

Apparently their heads came into violent collision for the girl crumpled into an unconscious heap on the sidewalk.

Gilbert didn't like the look on the man's face as he picked the girl up. Without a moment's hesitation Gilbert rushed out.

"See here, what's happened?" he questioned belligerently.

The other held firmly to the limp form of the girl.

"This young lady, a friend of mine, has bumped her head, that's all—no need to make a fuss about it," he said.

The stranger relinquished his burden.

"Oh, that's a different matter," he said with assumed politeness, and escaped from the quickly gathering crowd.

Gilbert scattered them all and carried the girl of his dreams tenderly into the shop and from thence to the big living-room behind, where his mother sat.

"She evidently got a nasty bump," said Gilbert, and gazed anxiously at the fluttering eyelids of the girl. "I don't know whether that dirty dog who tried to claim her did it deliberately or not—it looked mighty suspicious," he growled.

"There, there," said Mrs. Gilbert soothingly. "Don't be judging the man too harshly. Now you run along and mind the shop—she mustn't be frightened when she comes around—by so many people."

"Many people! Just you and me!" laughed Tom, but he obeyed instructions after a lingering glance at her.

"You're quite safe, my dear," said Mrs. Gilbert. "You had a bump on the mail box and you are in the shop just beside it." Did Mrs. Gilbert fancy it or did a light flush stain the girl's cheeks at mention of the shop beside the mail box?

"You are a dear, and how horribly silly of me to bump my head. I think I can stand now." She smiled into Mrs. Gilbert's eyes. "I'm so sorry to have put you to this trouble."

"It was no trouble. I am just thankful my son was looking out the window and—well, my dear, he fancies he rescued you from the clutches of a flirt—but don't breathe a word to him about it."

The blush was very evident now and Tom burst into the room to make inquiries just when it was at its height.

"Well, what a change from the little Pale Face I carried in, mother," he said joyfully.

Peggy Underwood looked up and held out a slim hand.

"It was very, very kind of you, she said sweetly, with a swift shy glance at Tom. "And your mother has been so good to me. I am Peggy Underwood and have charge of the library just around the corner."

She rose. "If you don't mind, I must rush back as there is no one in charge, but if I may I should love to come in this afternoon. I have an hour off at four."

"Good," said Tom. "I'll be here, too."

And when four o'clock came Mrs. Gilbert bustled about happily making tea. She loved young people and only hoped that Tom and this lovely girl would find happiness together.

It was a wonderful tea party in the big living-room and, when some one entered the shop, it was Mrs. Gilbert who arose to attend.

The man who entered was the one whom Tom considered a cad.

"Oh—I have just come in to inquire after the young lady your son is engaged to," he said, and noticed the surprise in Mrs. Gilbert's face.

But she was quite equal to the occasion. "She is all right now, thank you, and is having tea with us. Oh, Peggy dear," she called out, and Peggy appeared at the door. "This is the gentleman whose head came into collision with yours—he has called to see how you are."

"And to apologize. Your fiance rescued you from the hands of the villain," the man said and watched her closely. "He was a bit of a caveman about it, too."

Peggy cast a swift glance at Tom, who had followed close on her heels. There was not the flicker of one long, silky eyelash as she said softly, "Well—that is what one's fiance is for—isn't it?"

And Tom exchanged a broad grin with the mail box outside.

Memorial Planting Planned At Harrodsburg, Ky., Friday,
June 16.

Harrodsburg, Ky.—Bryan Station Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, Lexington, is to plant a memorial tree in Kentucky Pioneer State Park here, June 16, in honor of the heroes of Ft. Harrod, especially the women whose daring in going to the Bryan Station Springs for water, diverted lurking Indians from their attack, and saved the settlers.

The tree is to be taken from beside the spring, and is to be donated by W. C. H. Wood.

Bryan Station Chapter also has planted a large flower bed in the park near the cabin in which Abraham Lincoln's parents were married.

The tree planting program is to be independent of the ceremonies at the park on June 16, when the Old Ft. Harrod replica will be dedicated, together with the George Rogers Clark marker, placed by the Harrodsburg Woman's Club and the Colonial Gateways, given to the park by the Society of Colonial Wars, and the Colonial Dames in Kentucky, in recognition of the fact that Harrodsburg is the only colonial town in the state.

A rather prominent member of the business women's section of the Woman's Department club was recently invited to a "shower" for a bride-elect. She playfully handed him the package and said: "Guess what I'm taking to the party." He felt it and replied: "So you baked a cake, did you?"—Indianapolis News.

of Ohio Legislature

One Ohio legislature adopted a resolution declaring a former President of the United States guilty of a treasonable act. It is true the succeeding legislature rescinded it, but it stood on the journal for two years. The Forty-second legislature was the body that adopted it and John Quincy Adams was the accused man. He was then a member of the house of representatives, representing Massachusetts in congress, and had laid before the house the petition of a constituent asking that the union of states be dissolved. The resolution adopted in Ohio declared that in aiding to give publicity and importance to the treasonable proposition, Mr. Adams had merited censure and that the legislature of Ohio "should stamp his course and conduct in the matter with its indignant disapprobation." Soon after the next legislature met, a resolution to rescind the action was passed. The rescinding resolution declared that the censure had been based on erroneous information and was "calculated to cast undue reproach on the character of a statesman and patriot."—Detroit News.

Lesson for June 19

PETER TEACHES GOOD CITIZENSHIP

Temperance Lesson.

LESSON TEXT—I Peter 2:11-17; 4:1-5.

GOLDEN TEXT—Love worketh no ill to his neighbor.—Rom. 13:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Tells Us How to Behave.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Rules for Right Living.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Makes a Good Citizen.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Character of a Good Citizen.

In order to get an intelligent grasp of today's lesson, one must get a view of the entire epistle as to its purpose and method. The purpose was to establish all who were passing through suffering and testing (see ch. 1:7, 3:14, 4:12, 5:10-12).

The principles of Christian behavior set forth in the text of this lesson are of broader scope than citizenship. They embrace:

I. Behavior as Pilgrims and Sojourners (vv. 11, 12).

Christians are merely sojourners on the earth. They have not here their permanent home but are journeying through the earth on their way to the eternal home in the heavens. Our heavenly citizenship (Phil. 3:20) should constrain us to the maintenance of conduct consistent with our high calling.

1. Abstain from fleshly lusts (v. 11).

The term lusts includes the entire army of unclean forces springing from our carnal natures. They are enumerated in Gal. 5:19-21. These war against the soul. The Christian should not be under the sway of carnal passion.

2. Behavior as citizens (vv. 13-17).

While the Christian's true citizenship is in heaven he has a responsibility as a citizen on the earth.

1. Obey all requirements of civil rulers (v. 13).

Fidelity to Christ is shown by loyalty to civil authority. The intelligent Christian recognizes the necessity of government and graciously submits to those in authority over him regardless of the form of government. His duties as a citizen he performs as the Lord's free man—not through servile fear. Government even of a low order is better than anarchy.

2. Honor all men (v. 17).

He will see in every man the image of God and therefore give honor to him. This applies to all relations wherein we touch human life.

3. Love the brotherhood (v. 17).

The Christian has a peculiar love for those who are of the same household. The brotherhood is composed of those who are children of God by faith in Jesus Christ.

4. Fear God (v. 17).

5. Honor the King (v. 17).

This has a peculiar significance because in all probability the wicked Nero was then reigning as emperor.

II. Behavior in a World of Opposition (I Peter 4:1-5).

1. Armed for the conflict (v. 1).

Christians are engaged in a tremendous conflict with evil forces within and without. Satan and his angels are bent on the believer's defeat and destruction. The only way to keep from being overcome with his darts is to arm oneself with the mind of Christ.

2. The salutary effect of suffering (v. 1).

Suffering has a remedial effect upon God's children. The one who suffers with Christ as an example will have the consciousness that it is his identity with Christ that calls forth the opposition of the world.

3. God's will, the regulating force of his life (v. 2).

Not the lusts of the flesh, but the will of God is the directing force of his life.

4. The consciousness of a wasted life (v. 3).

Since the flesh has so long had sway over the life, God is entitled to the rest of the believer's energy. Looking back upon a wasted life in serving the lusts of the flesh will move one to give no more time to serving such a master.

5. The attitude of the world toward the one who separates himself from it (v. 4).

The world speaks evil of those who will not go its way. The world not only wonders at the life of the Christian who separates himself from its pleasures, but will heap upon him nicknames and reproach.

6. Account shall be given (v. 5).

The Christian should so live as to be able to render an account to God.

The Joy of Christ

O believer, the joy of Christ is within you; give it room, let it spring up within you like a well of living water, and you will rejoice in the Lord always, and again rejoice.—G. H. C. McGregor.

Praising God

When you find that a man has got to praising God it is a good sign. Oh, let us get to personal love, to personal praise! That is what is wanted in the church today.—D. L. Moody.

JUDGE SOWERS'

WILL BEQUEATHS

$300,000

Widow Receives Majority; Employees, Church, Relatives

and Associates Are Remembered.

The majority of the late Judge Daniel H. Sowers' estate, estimated at $300,000, goes to his widow, Mrs. Mary Parsons Sowers, after 24 bequests have been made to other relatives, friends and local institutions, according to terms of his will, probated Tuesday with Judge Bostwick.

To St. Paul's Episcopal church, of which he was a warden, Judge Sowers left $25,000 to keep in repair the Elizabeth Deshler Sowers memorial organ and to purchase music for the church. The organ is a memorial to his first wife.

The will was made in February, 1926, and names as executor, John H. Summers, law partner of Judge Sowers for many years. Personal property was valued at $150,000 and real estate holdings totaled a like amount, according to the estimate.

The Big Sisters and Tuberculosis Society each benefited to the extent of $1,000. Dr. Andre Crotti was given $1,500 and John G. Deshler, $500, "to perpetuate the friendship which has existed so long among them."

Remembering employees who had been with him many years, Judge Sowers left to Mary E. Reed, $1,500; Hulda Leideger, Mollie Ludwig and Ralph Morris, $1,200 each; David S. Benbow, his associate in the Sowers-Benbow Lumber Co., $1,500, and J. Herbert Knecht, Los Angeles, former resident of Columbus, $1,500.

To his first wife's mother, Mrs. Mary E. Deshler, "who has been a real mother since the death of my own mother," Judge Sowers bequeathed $1,000, and to his second mother-in-law, Mrs. Harriett S. Parsons, Huntington, W. Va., he left $1,000.

Bequests to other relatives included $5,000 each to Emory B. Sowers, brother, and Mary S. Taylor, sister, and $1,500 each to his nieces and nephews, Lucy M. Notestine, Homer D. Broyles, Eunice Broyles, Elizabeth B. Guy, Harry S. Taylor, Edgar S.

Taylor and Joseph H. Sowers.

Judge Sowers also left $5,000 to his son, David Deshler Sowers, "who was amply provided for by his grandfather," according to the will. His law library went to Mr. Summers.—O. S. Journal.

If a man wastes time he robs himself.

No poetry that isn't thoroughly understood lasts.

A woman's tears float her out of a lot of difficulties.

Don't let a bad habit get a mortgage on your life.

A heart full of grace is better than a head full of notions.

Talk too much and people will heed very little that you say.

You never hear a man boast that his wife shines his shoes.

Wise is the man who has a cage ready for the bird in hand.

Poverty chastens the soul, but being broke sharpens the wits.

If you must waste time waste your own. Do not waste other people's.

After having his leg pulled the average man feels like kicking himself.

It is the easiest thing in the world to apologize when you are in the right.

A defeated man may go to his grave in the sulks, but he won't if he can write.

If a man is no earthly good he is always asserting that he is as good as anybody.

Those who never preach don't care much for the welfare of their fellow creatures.

We are awed most by the great when we see with what facility they sway the public.

For old men, playing golf is an exhibition that they have made a success of their life's work.

Fortunately all those who "have a better plan" haven't the capital to muss up the system with it.

For Woman's Protection

The custom of a man's walking on the side nearer the street when with a woman arose from the fact that in former times water and refuse fell from roofs and upper windows into an open ditch between street and sidewalk, according to Liberty.

THE OLD HOME ROAD.
(John J. Daly)

Some roads are invitations
Calling men to fields afar—
And other roads, repelling,
Keep most people where they are

There are high roads and low roads,
And open roads and closed—
And roads that hide by hillsides
Where the dead have long reposed,
And roads that come to cities,
And roads that swing away
To the merry greens of villages
Where the little children play.

There are dry roads and wet roads
That make you walk or run,
And roads that stretch like ribbons
O'er the mountains, in the sun.
There are roads that wind thru valleys
Thru forests deep and cool,
Where the rippling, racing waters
Tumble to the sylvan pool.

There are free roads and toll roads
You meet most ev'ry where,
And roads that hie to Happiness,
And roads that drive to Care.
There are roads that go a-rambling,
And, while all roads lead to Rome,
The best road in the universe
Is the road that runs back home.

Unavoidable Waste

At least $5,000,000 a year goes down the drains of London in the form of soapsuds. Fat or oil used in making soap is worth something like 10 cents
a pound, and owing to the fact that London's water is hard, each thousand gallons of it wastes 18 pounds of soap fat. It would not pay to attempt to recover this fat from sewage, yet there is no other way of saving it.

EDUCATIONAL BUDGET IS CUT
BY GOVERNOR

Director of Schools For Deaf, Blind and Crippled Loses Placé by Action.

Appropriation of $4500 for salary of the director of the division of schools for the deaf, blind and crippled children, state department of education, was vetoed in the general appropriations bill, it developed Wednesday.

Mrs. Hazel Hadley, Columbus, has held the position of director of this division for five years. She has one assistant, and the two of them are the only employes of the division.
The appropriation for the salary of the assistant was not vetoed, nor were appropriations for salaries in any other divisions in the department of education with the exception of the State library.

Mrs. Hadley's salary is $3000 per year and that of her assistant is $2000. The work of the division is supervising the conduct of local schools for deaf, blind and crippled children.

Part of the expense of such schools is borne by the state and the remainder by Rotary clubs of the state. The work of Ohio is similar to that conducted by Rotary clubs in other states.

J. A. Meckstroth, secretary to Governor Donahey, said that when the division could operate as efficiently under direction of an assistant as under that of a director. His motive
Mr. Meckstroth said, was economy.

Since that time, Rotary officials called on the governor and he told them he had no objection to the restoration of the item for Mrs. Hadley's salary if the emergency board wanted to allow it, Mr. Meckstroth said.

New Jewel Fad

Paris has what is considered the most expensive fad of all. It is that each month of the year the chic woman must wear the month's "birth-stone"—the ruby, during July, the opal during October and the other stones according to their month. The fad was started by a blond actress of the Comedie Francaise, whose whims are adopted by many as fashion's law. Many rich women have taken up the idea with real jewelry,
but this vogue probably will be followed by others who can sport only synthetic gems.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Reichel-derfer announce the marriage of their daughter, Ruth, to Mr. Ferdinand Martin Pickens, son of Mrs. W.
E. Pickens, which was solemnized at Portsmouth, May 17, last. The marriage was performed by Rev. L. Lin-denmeyer and the witnesses were,
Stuart Walling formerly of this city
and Miss Louise Bush, of Portsmouth.
The young people left this city Wednesday for Seabring, Florida, where they expect to locate.

A highly respected woman, Mrs.
Rosa Martin, of this city, and Mr.
Charles B. Bateman, of Frankfort,
were united in holy matrimony at the Church of the Brethren parsonage,
Tuesday afternoon by the pastor,
Rev. A. G. Crosswhite, speaking the simple words that put the final seal
upon the life contract. Only a few special friends witnessed the nuptials,
but a host of friends unite in "best wishes" for their future. Their place of residence has not been fully decided upon.

Early in the afternoon Tuesday
Rev. Crosswhite, pastor of the Church of the Brethren, was called from the central office here by parties from Delphi, Indiana, saying that they had arrived in the city and would be ready for a marriage ceremony as soon as it could be arranged.

They had left Delphi at four o'clock that morning and were here a little after noon. Pretty good driving for a Ford roadster—no, it was a Buick,
but it got them here just the same.
Twenty-five years ago while holding a pastorate at Flora, Indiana, Rev.
Crosswhite had spoken similar words
for the bride's parents, Mr. O. A.
Trent and Miss Osta Wheeler, and after serving several in different churches, widely apart, it was his good pleasure and fortune to speak
the words Tuesday that joined in holy wedlock, their oldest daughter, Miss Thelma Trent and Mr. Paul Dickinson, both of Delphi, where they will reside. After a short visit with an old Peru girl friend here and an aunt at Delaware, they will return home by another route.

Russia Has Lottery in Which No One Is Loser

Moscow.—Over $10,000,000 were subscribed in Moscow alone in seven days when the Soviet state lottery loan was opened. This is an average of $5 for each inhabitant of the city.
Besides the grand prize of $25,000,
many hundreds of smaller rewards are offered for the holders of lucky numbers. In addition, every subscriber will eventually recover his money, under the lottery rules, as the contribution is in the form of a state loan.
The tickets were sold on the installment plan, with six months in which to pay.

In Leningrad and other centers the lottery loan was well supported but without the spectacular speed and volume which were its features in Moscow.

Diet Makes Goldfish Live for Twenty Years

London.—How long will a goldfish live? Any life insurance underwriter who was sufficiently enterprising would quote a first-class goldfish's life
at from fifteen to twenty years,
providing the environment is suitable and if it is regularly
fed on ants' eggs and crushed vermicelli and not on crumbs of black beetles, according to aquarium authorities.

The carp family, to which the goldfish belongs, is famous for longevity. There are carp in the ponds of the Chateau de Chantilly in France which belonged to the Prince de Conde
and which are supposed to be centuries old.

THE CHAMPION SEWING CLUB HAD MEETING

Monroe Girls Have Good Session With Mrs. Hosler-- Next With Margaret Dick.

The Monroe Champion Sewing club held their third meeting at the home of the leader, Mrs. Charles Hosler, on June 14.

The meeting was called to order by President Dorothy A. Porter. The roll was called by the secretary, Garnet Wills. Each answered by reading a psalm. This plan is to be adopted hereafter.

The first psalm was read by Dorothy A. Porter, second, Garnet Wills; third, Geneva Bandy; fourth, Mabel Smith; fifth, Mary Downs; sixth, Mary Haller; seventh, Mary E. Knapp eighth, Marjorie Arbogast; ninth, Frances Arbogast; tenth, Mary M.
List; eleventh, Naomi Hatfield; twelfth, Agnes White. The minutes of the last meeting were also read and approved.

The opening song was "Dwelling in Beulah Land," and the Lord's prayer was repeated. The program consisted of three recitations given by Frances Arbogast and Mary M. List. The pianist was Julia Hosler.

Arrangements were made to send flowers to Mildred Liston, who is sick and unable to attend meetings. Each member took up her work and refreshments were served. Seven visitors were present. We adjourned to meet at the home of Margaret Ann Dick, June 21.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

In the death of Samuel Wesley Dunlap, the First Methodist Episcopal church of Circleville appreciates that is has lost a long-time, faithful and devoted member; one, while health and strength permitted loyal in his attendance, interest and support:

Therefore, be it Resolved; that the church go upon record as profoundly cherishing his virtues and membership loyalty; that the ripe in years and accomplishment, we deplore his passing; and that we extend to his venerable and beloved wife, and to his family, our sincere sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, that the secretary of the official board, be requested to spread these resolutions upon his minutes, to furnish the bereaved family with a copy, and that copies, also, be sent to the local papers for publication.

Respectfully submitted,
J. W. Johnson,
S. G. Rader, Committee.

ROSE TO FAME, BUT HAD UNHAPPY LIFE

William Cowper, the English poet, who died a century and a quarter ago,
had some unfortunate experiences in his illustrious career. His mother died when William was six years old, and he was homesick in a boarding school.

The homesick boy was oppressed to such an extent that his health failed and he was taken home. That experience made him a bitter opponent of the educational system prevailing in England in his day. Cowper also was unfortunate in a love affair because of the opposition presented by the girl's father.

The girl was Cowper's cousin, and this and other considerations caused Ashby Cowper to decline to sanction
the marriage of his daughter, Theodora, to William. The tradition is that to obey this injunction the young people sacrificed their happiness and never saw each other again.—Kansas City Star.

DATES AND TITLES OF FRENCH KINGS

Whether one believes that figures never lie or that they may be manipulated to mean almost anything, it is curious to find a writer in Les Mots Croises busying himself with pointing out the following coincidences:

Louis IX of France was born in 1215. If you take the trouble to add these four digits you will discover that the total, nine, equals the figure in the king's title.

Charles VII, known as the Wise, came into the world in 1402. Addition discloses that the sum of your efforts will match Charles' number in the succession of his name.

Louis XIV began to reign in the year 1643 and this assuredly adds up to fourteen; he was seventy-seven years of age when he died and one gets fourteen points from the two sevens.

Formerly it was the custom in Eng-of Mrs. at the age of fifty. The same custom was practiced to a limited ex-spinster, took advantage of the cus-

Light Bulbs

Before discarding an electric light bulb place it on a drop light, turn on the current and shake the bulb, holding it between you and the light. Then try it on the light; the chances are it may do service for several months longer. The fine wires of the filament have a habit of becoming disconnected. By shaking it the parts come together again, making the bulb as good as new.

WRITING PAPER ONCE CURRENCY

Macerated Money Turns Out High Grade Pulp and Country Profits.

Washington.—As a further step toward economy in maintaining the large amount of paper money in circulation in the United States, the bureau of standards, in co-operation with the bureau of engraving and printing and the bureau of efficiency, has worked out a method of converting macerated currency into first-class writing paper.

The work was the result of experimentation which brought about the making of a harder and tougher currency paper so that dollar bills would last longer—not with the individual—but in circulation.

The experiments brought a vastly improved currency paper and now dollar bills have an average life of more than two years. This done, the process was reversed. Each day four tons of cuttings, waste and currency retired from circulation is macerated under the eyes of a board, the duties of which are to watch and see in the public interest that no bill condemned escapes the macerator and gets back into circulation.

De-Inking the Pulp.

The product of maceration was a relatively worthless pulp. It was sold to souvenir makers in relatively small quantities, to be made into souvenirs of Washington. It was sold as a mash containing 70 per cent water and all the ink.

No attempt is made to clean the pulp, the process being carried only far enough to comply with the requirements for protection against unlawful use of the waste paper; that is, that it be entirely debilitated so that no printed characters can be distinguished and that all distinctive features of the paper itself be removed.

In this form the pulp is suitable for coarse paper products only, such as certain grades of boards, owing to its large content of impurities in the form of lumps. For this reason the price received is so low that according to the survey by the board of efficiency, the maceration is costing annually from $15,000 to $18,000.

As the original paper is composed of the highest grade linen and cotton rag fibers, a clean pulp produced from the waste paper should have a ready market for fine writing and printing papers at a considerably increased price. It is estimated that by so improving the product, the present loss can be turned to a profit amounting possibly to $50,000.

How It Is Cleaned.

The material presents unusual resistance to the ordinary de-inking treatments, owing to hardness and toughness of the paper, the large amount of ink present and the resistant quality of the ink. It was found possible, however, to completely de-ink and otherwise quite thoroughly clean it with semi-commercial machinery consisting of a duster, a rotary digester and a beater equipped with a drum washer.

The paper produced from the pulp compared favorably with good grades of fine writing and printing papers. As is to be expected, considering the wear to which paper money is subjected and the weakening effect of de-inking and de-fiberizing processes, a large proportion of the original strength of the fibers is lost. The reclaimed fiber paper, however, is sufficiently strong for the purpose mentioned, being somewhat stronger than that made from new sulphite fiber and as strong as some grades of rag fiber papers made from lower grades of rags.

The results obtained are considered so promising that it is planned to purchase the additional commercial equipment for use in the recovery plant of the bureau of engraving and printing required to produce a clean pulp and to more thoroughly de-water it so as to lower the transportation cost of the product.

Rare Suicide Effort With Dynamite Fails

Shamokin, Pa.—Irvin Paul, forty-one years old, recently placed a stick of dynamite under his head and another under his feet, while he lay on the ground, touched a match to the fuse, and, although one stick exploded, lived to tell the tale. The stick of dynamite under Paul's head exploded while the one under his feet failed to fire.

"I've got a pretty good head, if a stick of dynamite won't blow it off," Paul said to attaches at the hospital where he was taken. He suffered severe lacerations of the head and face, a broken left arm and cuts and bruises about the body. He also was injured internally. Hospital attaches believe Paul will recover, although it is feared he will lose the sight of his left eye.

AMUSEMENTS

A story that moves from the bucolic scenes of the French countryside to the more hectic scenes of a tinselled Paris affords Adolphe Menjou his latest dramatic opportunity in "Evening Clothes", now at the Met theater.

In the first reels of the picture, Paramount proffers a different Menjou, one who thru his remarkable versatility is enabled to discharge the exigencies of a strange role with the ease that has always characterized his past performances.

As the rustic Comte Lucien D'Artois who makes his farm and all its appurtenances his chief joy in life, Menjou is more than convincing. He discards his famous polish for the naive of the country gentleman who sees the beauty of dawn not thru the mist of a night's revelry, but with the clear, appreciative eye of a man who goes early to bed and rises early. He sports a beard, his clothes never quite fit, and he has a keen enthusiasm. Besides his bride, just arrived from Paris, he appears uncouth, for Germains (Virginia Valli) has been worshipping the god of correctness in the Paris drawing rooms. She is distinctly city-bred and in marrying Menjou follows the decree of her parents, after the French custom. Her scorn of him is engendered on her arrival with her parents at his estate to find him out in his barn waxing enthusiastic over a new-born colt.

She leaves him, and he, realizing why, goes to Paris to make of himself a gentleman. The Menjou of the old time polish steps out of his country shell to delight eyes of the audience.

All attempts to interest Germaine fail however. She breaks the dinner engagement at his apartment when he is to prove to her that he has made himself worthy of her love. He turns to the gay life, and quickly dissipates his fortune. Menjou, always makes an intriguing failure. The subsequent complications in the plot afford him wide latitude for the subtleties for which he is famous. Luther Reed who directed Menjou in "The Ace of Cads" exploits the star's intelligence to the highest degree in "Evening Clothes." The sequences following Menjou's loss of all his property with the exception of one dress suit, bubble over with humor. Pathos is not forgotten. Things work out to Menjou's ultimate happiness, but the solution to all the difficulties is distinctly a new one.

Noah Beery as Lazarre shows a well-developed flair for comedy. The ever-pleasing Louise Brooks is not the least of the picture's attractions. She is cast as Fox Trot a pretty frequenter of the Paris cafes and night clubs.

MUSKETEERS

Play For Traditional Commencement Dance.

The Musketeers, direct from the Hotel Alms, Cincinnati, en route to the Music Box Restaurant, Cleveland, Ohio, made famous by Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians, fortunately have been obtained to supply the music this year for the Circleville High annual commencement dance of the summer season.

This band has created an enviable reputation in Cincinnati and its environs, no less by its pep, than for its ability to put out real harmony and syncopation.

The beautiful sunken garden will be the scene of the merry-making Thursday evening at the C. A. C. gym, which has literally been transformed into a magic garden and it is hoped that all the friends of the class of '27 will avail themselves of this invitation to spend an evening so chock full of pleasure and delight.

Vitaglass in Greenhouse

To force an earlier start of his garden this year, W. Kerr Russell, M. B. D. S. of Edinburgh, planted seedlings under vitaglass in his greenhouse. He reported that the vitaglass plants germinated before the others and showed much taller and sturdier growth. Mr. Russell is part author of "Ultra-Violet Radiation and Actinotherapy." He suggests that greenhouses be equipped with vitaglass and that the glass would be especially adaptable in the raising of early strawberries.

ROBTOWN.

The community was greatly shocked to hear of the very sudden death of Harley Rhoads last Saturday afternoon.

Children's services will be observed at our school Sunday night, June 19. The third Sunday in July has been decided upon as the date for our community dinner. Any one who feels interested in Robtown and vicinity is cordially invited to be with us on that day.

Sousa says that "every child needs music and should be given musical instruction." Well and good, as long as we don't have to listen to programs on which appear more than six or eight children who can almost play the violin or piano.

Punishment a Deterrent

BLOWITZ HID FACT OF JEWISH ORIGIN

Some curious things have come to light at the festivities of the unveiling of a memorial tablet to Henri de Blowitz, the famous London Times correspondent, Pierre Van Paassen says, in the Atlanta Constitution. The tablet was unveiled in his native village in Czechoslovakia. The school-master of the village has been largely responsible for the whole affair. He showed guests a letter, written in French from Paris, in which De Blowitz seeks admission into the Roman Catholic church and expresses his desire to give a gift to the poor local church. The famous man, whose real name was Oppen and who came from Blovice, however, writes in his autobiography that he was a Catholic from infancy. He also starts his book with a reference to the chateau of Blovice, whereas the tablet was affixed to a little house in the square. His father was no lord of the manor, but a Jewish shopkeeper who at the same time acted as caretaker of the local synagogue. The boy, Oppen, was inscribed at the village school, as the present master showed, where he won a prize in 1834 for his proficiency in reading the Czech language.

THE OLD FRIENDS

There are no friends like old friends,
And none so good and true;
We greet them when we meet them
As roses greet the dew;
No other friends are dearer,
Thou born of kindred mold,
And while we prize the new ones,
We treasure more the old.
There are no friends like old friends,
Where'er we dwell or roam;
In lands beyond the ocean,
Or near the bounds of home;
And when they smile to gladden,
Or sometimes frown to guide,
We fondly wish those old friends
Were always by our side.
There are no friends like old friends,
To help us with the load
That all must bear who journey
O'er life's uneven road,
And when unconquered sorrows
The weary hours invest,
The kindly words of old friends,
Are always found the best.
There are no friends like old friends,
To calm our frequent fear,
When shadows fall and deepen
Through life's declining years;
And when our faltering footsteps
Approach the Great Divide,
We'll long to meet the old friends
Who wait on the other side.

Financial "Lame Ducks"

The term "lame duck" was not first used for those members of congress who failed of re-election. It was stock exchange slang and referred to one who was unable to fulfill his contracts or engagements.

Friends Hard to Find

Jud Tunkins says a friend in need is usually a friend who is willing to take a chance on indorsing a note.

Traded Shirt for Pearl

A white undershirt occupies a higher position in the eyes of natives inhabiting Penrhyn Island, which is near Christmas Island, far out in the Pacific, than does white man's money, according to Medford R. Kellum, who recently completed a two-year cruise of the South seas. Arriving at Penrhyn Island, Kellum offered a native several thousand dollars for a gorgeous "pipi" pearl. The native refused to consider selling his gem for mere paper, but accepted Kellum's white undershirt in trade and regarded his new acquisition as being well worth its cost to him.

Old Word for "Council"

Hustings is an Anglo-Saxon word, meaning "council." In Great Britain the hustings were the temporary platform on which the nomination of parliamentary candidates was made prior to the ballot act of 1872, and from which they addressed the electors.

QUALITY AT LOW COST

Make sure today, that you are using the right oil in your Ford.

Smoothness and economy depend upon the oil you use

Only a specially-compounded light-bodied oil—Polarine F—can give best results in your Ford. There are several reasons why this is so.

The Ford motor is a high speed motor and requires an oil which flows freely and quickly to all engine parts.

It is a high compression motor in which carbon formation is more serious, hence an oil of low carbon tendency is required.

Its bearing construction requires an oil light enough to penetrate quickly to bearing surfaces, yet of sufficient body to withstand heat and pressure.

The splash system of lubrication is used, requiring a light-bodied oil which will atomize readily when splashed by the connecting rods.

Polarine F also has the second vital Ford oil characteristic. It keeps transmission bands soft and pliable—prevents chatter and grab.

Our recommendation of Polarine F for Fords is based on our own experience with these cars as well as the judgment of lubrication engineers.

Change crank-case oil every 500 miles and refill with Polarine F. For chassis lubrication use Polarine BB (for differential gears) and Polarine Cup Grease. These high-quality lubricants are available everywhere in Ohio to help you get best results from your Ford.

Rosa Accepted Tony's Offer

By AD SCHUSTER

(Copyright.)

"IT IS all right. Some day when I get a raise, be a little boss, then maybe, the big, you will be sorry you will not marry me." Tony drew himself up grandly that he might not show his disappointment. This Rosa thought of nothing but the motion picture and her little job in the store.

"And if I get married, Tony, it will be you. But you understand there are so many things to do, so many good times, that I do not wish to cook the dinner and wash the clothes even for you." She laughed at him and he thought, even in his anguish, that her eyes were like jewels.

"You laugh. It is all right. You see the picture and think you will be the actress. Perhaps not. The camera cannot put the sparkle of your eye on the screen and without the sparkle of your eye you are," Tony shrugged his shoulders, "not so very much."

That was the start of the quarrel. No one could tell Rosa who was earning twenty-two dollars a week and saving a whole dollar of it each Saturday in the bank, she was not so very much. If Tony would be jealous he would not call and then there would be so much more time for the pictures. There were better men, many better men than Tony, on the screen at the Acme theater. She would go there and snap her fingers and laugh.

The next afternoon there stopped in the store a man who took her to one side and explained she was violating a law. In amazement she listened to what he had to say.

"Me, I am twenty years old and you say I have to go to school? Is it that I don't know too much already? Impossible!"

"You are an alien and you are not twenty-one. You will have to go to night school until you reach that age." To make it strong he added, "I have informed your employer and if you do not obey you will lose your job."

When Rosa went to night school she passed the motion picture house and reflected upon her wasted opportunities. It cannot be said she was an apt scholar, for there was a rebellious gleam in her dark eyes and her thoughts were far away from her books.

"It is queer stuff you teach me," she protested, "can I sell gloves any better for knowing so much? You should be ashamed." The others laughed, but Rosa held her head high and considered herself a victim of injustice.

Though she would not learn from the books, the girl found out many things concerning the school, teachers and students. She reckoned the number of months she must attend these classes until she should become twenty-one, and her fine spirits drooped.

If they kept on putting stuff into her head, she decided, they would take the sparkle from her eyes. And Tony had said that without the sparkle she would be nothing. Tony? She would find him. She would see, somehow, that he met her on the street.

When the meeting took place, Tony was dressed in a new suit and stepping high.

"As I said it, I am the little boss. Pretty soon, maybe two years or fifteen, I will be the big boss. Now you are sorry you said you would not marry me."

"Tony, I didn't mean it. It was to make you jealous and propose all over again. I was going to say 'yes' next time you asked me."

Tony looked at her in surprise and again fell victim to the sparkle in her eyes.

"Then right now, I propose again, and what do you say?"

"I say 'yes,' of course," and Rosa took his arm, and as they walked down the street, kept looking up at him lest he be denied the treat of those eyes.

"These women," said Tony, "they don't fool me. It is because I have the better job, and you say 'yes.' Very well, I am satisfied, but not one bit fooled."

"And these men," thought Rosa, "they are so easy fooled. It is because a married woman does not have to go to school I accept him. But I am satisfied, too."

Before the Days of Steam Fire Engines

The first fire engines introduced into America were received at Boston from England, 248 years ago, January 27, 1679. This early engine was merely a strong cistern of oak placed upon wheels, and furnished with pumps, air chambers and a suction pipe of strong leather. The end for receiving the water was provided with a strainer.

In case the suction pipe could not be used, the water was supplied to the container by buckets passed from hand to hand. The labor of three men was required to work the plunger and direct the nozzle.

Few improvements were made in the methods of fire fighting until the middle of the last century, when steam fire engines were introduced, the first successful steam fire engine being used in Cincinnati in 1853.

CHEWING GUM DEARER THAN SCHOOL BOOKS

One Billion Dollars is Spent For Movies and Three Billions For Automobiles.

People of the United States spend many times more money on chewing gum, motion picture shows, radios and other luxuries and non-necessities than they do for school textbooks for their children, according to an educational survey just completed by the American Book company.

"Total sales of school textbooks by all companies last year amounted to approximately only thirty millions of dollars," the survey report showed. "This was only one-third as much as we expended on chewing gum, sales of which totaled more than eighty-seven million dollars."

Approximately two thousand different textbooks were published in the United States last year, the survey showed, the American Book company alone having published enough books which, if laid end to end, would reach two thousand miles, or as far from Chicago to San Francisco. Approximately fifty thousand bound books are manufactured by this one company alone each day.

Statistics show, according to the report, that the American Book company is the oldest and largest manufacturer of school textbooks in the world, and that its ninety year history represents practically the span of educational development in the United States. American school books are internationally admitted to be the best and most highly developed in the world, the report showed.

NUNGESSER-COLI FIND PROVES A HOAX

ACCOUNTANT SENDS STORY TO RELIEVE THE MONOTONY

Of Life In a Lumber Camp In the Northern Wilds of Quebec—The Hopes of the World and a Sad Waiting Mother Cruelly Dashed To the Earth By the Thoughtlessness of a Bookkeeper Who Had Ennui.

Just to relieve the monotony of life in the lumber camp village of Chiconutimi, in northern Quebec, an accountant named A. Blais telephoned to River Bend, more than a hundred miles north of Quebec Wednesday reporting that the missing French fliers, Charles Nungesser and Francis Coli, had been found.

The report was soon relayed to Quebec and from there it was telegraphed and cabled to all parts of the world.

Blais was located by the United Press Wednesday night. He admitted he had perpetrated the hoax "just to relieve the monotony of life." The idea suggested itself to him, he added, by reports that flares had been sighted in the region of the camps of the Price Brothers Lumber company for whom Blais works.

The flares, it was learned Wednesday night, were a part of a store of such signals stolen recently from the Roberval aerial station and set off at intervals during the last few weeks for the sake of amusement.

On the basis of the confession by Blais, the Provincial government announced Wednesday night it would call off its plans to send airplanes in to the north woods to search for the fliers. Instructions were issued to forestry men, nevertheless, to keep a close watch over the entire district for the missing Frenchmen.

A wave of intense excitement swept thru Quebec late Wednesday when a report came in from River Bend, in the interior of the province that the French aviators Nungesser and Coli had been found.

Immediately the Quebec authorities and the lumbermen initiated searching inquiries; the Canadian railway, telegraph and telephone services issued instructions to probe all reports to the bottom; search parties were organized, and the district for many miles around was thoroughly combed.

Word of Nungesser and Coli spread with startling swiftness; it was that they had been found on Ship Shaw river, a tributary of the Saguenay east by south of Lake St. John.

The Provincial government had received no confirmation of any report beyond that which said lights had been observed. Government officials counsel caution in accepting as true reports that the flares were sent up by Nungesser and Coli for it is realized that other agencies might have been responsible for them.

HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATE.

Miss Mary Albertine Patton, a granddaughter of Mrs. Carrie A. Patton, of this city, was one of the graduates at the commencement held by the North High school at the coliseum, Columbus, Wednesday evening, June 15, at which nearly twenty-five thousand people gathered. There were 540 graduates from this high school alone. Her grandson, Louis Patton, was also promoted from the eighth grade to the first year high school, from the Indianola school.

BRIEFLY TOLD

—Grover Moore has secured a position with the Industrial Commission Columbus.

The entire Chiconutimi district was converted into a camp of willing watchers and searchers and nothing will be left undone to trace the source of the lights.

Nungesser and Coli left Paris May 8, in an attempt to make a nonstop flight to New York. They never were heard from after they started out across the ocean and it was believed that they had either fallen into the almost untraveled waters of the chilly north Atlantic or had come down in some uninhabited part of Newfoundland or Labrador with their goal almost in sight.

The first word suggesting that the fliers might have landed in Canada instead of Newfoundland was the fake report that flares, as the set off to call for assistance, had been seen in the Seguenay region.

SHORT SESSION.

The city council met in regular session Wednesday evening, June 15 with President John C. Geoller, presiding and the following present: Baker, Kline, Landenberger, Leist, Marion.

An ordinance granting the Norfolk and Western Railway company the right to construct and maintain a switch or side track over Canal and Ohio streets thence onto the lands of the Mid-West Box company, was introduced and read for the first time. On motion of Mr. Marion this ordinance was referred to the committee on railroads.

Gallipolis—Twenty-two Gallia and Meigs county moonshiners were arrested by state prohibition officers assisted by sheriff deputies and police and the Pomeroy jail was full to overflowing last night. Most of those arrested were fined $100 and costs. Several are still in jail still unable to pay.

Massillon—Police here today were probing the cause of a fire, believed to have been incendiary, which destroyed the old Massillon home of "General" Jacob S. Coxey, leader of the famous Coxey's army which marched to Washington in protest of labor conditions. The home, five north of Massillon was of log construction. It was owned by John Bozzacco, landscape gardener.

REFERENDUM BILL KILLED IN ILLINOIS

Down State Solons Win Over Chicago Wets in Battle For Prohibition Law.

After more than three hours of acrimonious debate, which at one time almost precipitated a fistic encounter, the Illinois senate Wednesday afternoon killed the Weber-O'Grady bill providing for a state referendum on repeal of the state prohibition law.

The veto was 17 to 33. The house had previously passed the measure, 80 to 63.

The debate was purely a Chicago-down-state battle. The wet Chicago delegation stood firm in the veto, as did the opposing faction, with one exception—Senator John Dailey of Peoria, who said he felt the proposed referendum would be worth while.

After Senator Denvir charged that Senator Andrew Cuthbertson of Bunker Hill, a leading speaker against the bill, had been receiving money from the Aanti-Saloon League for making dry speeches before farmers' organizations, the latter jumped to his feet and called his accuser a "contemptible liar."

Charges and counter-charges flew back and forth, but what seemed a certain fistic encounter did not materialize.

Johnson's "Odd" Habit Proved His Greatness

According to the greatest of all biographers, Boswell, Doctor Johnson, upon entering a library, "ran eagerly to one side of the room, intent on poring over the backs of books, says a writer in 'Private Book Collectors.' Because of this custom a contemporary once called him 'odd,' to which accusation Johnson replied: 'Sir, the reason is very plain. Knowledge is of two kinds. We know the subject ourselves, or we know where we can find information upon it. When we inquire into any subject the first thing we have to do is to know what books have treated of it. This leads us to look at catalogues and the backs of books in libraries.' No wonder that such a man knew so well how and where to tap the sources of knowledge and give the world a great and unique dictionary.

Does the supreme court of the United States grant or deny applications for review in an arbitrary way, without any genuine examination into the particular merits of each application? According to a statement made by Chief Justice Taft the other day, just before leaving Washington for his summer home at Murray Bay, there is an impression more or less widely current that such is the case.

Naturally, the chief justice is unwilling that such an impression, once known to exist, should be allowed to go without denial. The thoughtful person will see at once that it contains an imputation against the court's conception of its official duty in the matter concerned. The court has a discretionary jurisdiction as to the granting of reviews, not being obliged to review any case simply because a request to do so has been made; but the decision in each case must be a matter of real discretion, not an arbitrary choice. There must be, and there is, a careful examination of the briefs, petitions and records involved in these matters of certiorari jurisdiction; and this examination, says Mr. Taft, "is not a mere superficial glance, but a real analysis of each case."

Every such case is called by the chief justice in conference, after the several justices have examined the briefs and the records, and their separate findings are discussed. A vote is then taken, and if four justices favor granting the review the writ of certiorari is issued. All this is just as it should be, and one may add that the names of the men who compose the supreme court should be taken by the public as a sufficient guarantee that these requirements of judicial propriety are not neglected.—Columbus Dispatch.

MUSEUM CURATOR TRACES DADDIES OF "WILD" HORSES

Never Knew Bridle and Were Mysteriously Slain.

Washington.—Out in the West where they have roamed the ranges for years, wild horses are being rounded up for extinction.

These thousands never have known bridle nor rider and have obeyed only the laws of nature, but are not "wild" at all—in the scientific sense.

Back long before the first red-skinned Americans made their appearance, this country was full of real "wild horses," ancestors of the western ponies now being caught for disposition.

These real wild horses had lived and died—killed off in some strange way unknown to science—in a geologic age antedating the human age.

Dr. James W. Gidley, assistant curator of vertebrate paleontology of the United States National museum, is just back from Florida, where he came across the bones of scores of these animals. The country is full of such fossils, he says, even as Europe and other parts of the world are.

"Geologic records show these earlier horses were far more numerous and diversified in kind than the horses of today," said Doctor Gidley, in relating their story.

Our own old dobbie is really an "import." His immediate ancestors were brought from Europe with the first Spaniards to visit this country, soon after Columbus arrived, and the European horses of that time came from an Asiatic stock, that, in turn, came from some species of this geologic wild horse.

Negroes' Ark Refuses to Float During Flood

Memphis, Tenn.—Exhorted by their parson, a community of negroes in the lowlands near Parkin, Ark., emulated the example of Noah when they heard the flood was approaching and hastily built an ark. Into the crude vessel they crowded themselves and all their worldly belongings, including chickens, dogs, cats and mules. While they waited for the flood they prayed and rejoiced.

The flood came, but the ark refused to float. Water poured in from a hundred leaks in the uncaulked hull, and with the flood a foot and a half deep on the floor of the flat-bottomed craft its occupants fled to a railway embankment.

What One's Fiance Is For

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

TOM GILBERT was always thankful that he had been standing in the doorway of his shop when the incident, just outside, took place.

He watched the girl, as he had many times watched her, while she put a great bundle of magazines in the mail box which was on the sidewalk just in front of his shop.

While Gilbert gazed at her, quite satisfied with her from the tips of her well-shod feet to the mass of red-gold hair, his expression suddenly darkened.

He saw a good-looking man approaching the mail box, most obviously intent on a flirtation with the girl.

Gilbert never knew exactly how it happened, but what he did see was the bundle of magazines bumped out of the girl's arms and a swift stooping of both the man and the girl to pick them up.

Apparently their heads came into violent collision for the girl crumpled into an unconscious heap on the sidewalk.

Gilbert didn't like the look on the man's face as he picked the girl up. Without a moment's hesitation Gilbert rushed out.

"See here, what's happened?" he questioned belligerently.

The other held firmly to the limp form of the girl.

The stranger relinquished his burden.

"Oh, that's a different matter," he said with assumed politeness, and escaped from the quickly gathering crowd.

Gilbert scattered them all and carried the girl of his dreams tenderly into the shop and from thence to the big living-room behind, where his mother sat.

"She evidently got a nasty bump," said Gilbert, and gazed anxiously at the fluttering eyelids of the girl. "I don't know whether that dirty dog who tried to claim her did it deliberately or not—it looked mighty suspicious," he growled.

"There, there," said Mrs. Gilbert soothingly. "Don't be judging the man too harshly. Now you run along and mind the shop—she mustn't be frightened when she comes around—by so many people."

"Many people! Just you and me!" laughed Tom, but he obeyed instructions after a lingering glance at her.

"You're quite safe, my dear," said Mrs. Gilbert. "You had a bump on the mail box and you are in the shop just beside it." Did Mrs. Gilbert fancy it or did a light flush stain the girl's cheeks at mention of the shop beside the mail box?

"You are a dear, and how horribly silly of me to bump my head. I think I can stand now." She smiled into Mrs. Gilbert's eyes. "I'm so sorry to have put you to this trouble."

"It was no trouble. I am just thankful my son was looking out the window and—well, my dear, he fancies he rescued you from the clutches of a flirt—but don't breathe a word to him about it."

The blush was very evident now and Tom burst into the room to make inquiries just when it was at its height.

"Well, what a change from the little Pale Face I carried in, mother," he said joyfully.

Peggy Underwood looked up and held out a slim hand.

"It was very, very kind of you, she said sweetly, with a swift shy glance at Tom. "And your mother has been so good to me. I am Peggy Underwood and have charge of the library just around the corner." She rose. "If you don't mind, I must rush back as there is no one in charge, but if I may I should love to come in this afternoon. I have an hour off at four."

And when four o'clock came Mrs. Gilbert bustled about happily making tea. She loved young people and only hoped that Tom and this lovely girl would find happiness together.

It was a wonderful tea party in the big living-room and, when some one entered the shop, it was Mrs. Gilbert who arose to attend.

The man who entered was the one whom Tom considered a cad.

"Oh—I have just come in to inquire after the young lady your son is engaged to," he said, and noticed the surprise in Mrs. Gilbert's face.

But she was quite equal to the occasion. "She is all right now, thank you, and is having tea with us. Oh, Peggy dear," she called out, and Peggy appeared at the door. "This is the gentleman whose head came into collision with yours—he has called to see how you are."

Peggy cast a swift glance at Tom, who had followed close on her heels. There was not the flicker of one long, silky eyelash as she said softly, "Well—that is what one's fiance is for—isn't it?"

And Tom exchanged a broad grin with the mail box outside.

Memorial Planting Planned At Harrodsburg, Ky., Friday,
June 16.

Harrodsburg, Ky.—Bryan Station Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, Lexington, is to plant a memorial tree in Kentucky Pioneer State Park here, June 16, in honor of the heroes of Ft. Harrod, especially the women whose daring in going to the Bryan Station Springs for water, diverted lurking Indians from their attack, and saved the settlers.

The tree is to be taken from beside the spring, and is to be donated by W. C. H. Wood.

Bryan Station Chapter also has planted a large flower bed in the park near the cabin in which Abraham Lincoln's parents were married.

The tree planting program is to be independent of the ceremonies at the park on June 16, when the Old Ft. Harrod replica will be dedicated, together with the George Rogers Clark marker, placed by the Harrodsburg Woman's Club and the Colonial Gateways, given to the park by the Society of Colonial Wars, and the Colonial Dames in Kentucky, in recognition of the fact that Harrodsburg is the only colonial town in the state.

Shame on Him

A rather prominent member of the business women's section of the Woman's Department club was recently invited to a "shower" for a bride-elect. As she started from home with her gift (a waffle iron) carefully wrapped in a box, she met her next-door neighbor, a young former soldier. She playfully handed him the package and said: "Guess what I'm taking to the party." He felt it and replied: "So you baked a cake, did you?"—Indianapolis News.

Many "Black Fridays"

Black Friday is any Friday marked by a public calamity, as in England, by the advance of the Pretender to Derby (December 8, 1745), or by the financial panic of May 11, 1863, and in the United States by similar disasters in New York on September 24, 1869, and September 13, 1873. Good Friday is also termed "Black Friday" from the color of the vestments worn on that day by the clergy.

Statesman Drew Ire of Ohio Legislature
One Ohio legislature adopted a resolution declaring a former President of the United States guilty of a treasonable act. It is true the succeeding legislature rescinded it, but it stood on the journal for two years. The Forty-second legislature was the body that adopted it and John Quincy Adams was the accused man. He was then a member of the house of representatives, representing Massachusetts in congress, and had laid before the house the petition of a constituent asking that the union of states be dissolved. The resolution adopted in Ohio declared that in aiding to give publicity and importance to the treasonable proposition, Mr. Adams had merited censure and that the legislature of Ohio "should stamp his course and conduct in the matter with its indignant disapprobation." Soon after the next legislature met, a resolution to rescind the action was passed. The rescinding resolution declared that the censure had been based on erroneous information and was "calculated to cast undue reproach on the character of a statesman and patriot."—Detroit News.

Improved Uniform International Sunday School Lesson
(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D.D., Dean, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
(© 1927, Western Newspaper Union.)

PETER TEACHES GOOD CITIZENSHIP

Temperance Lesson.
LESSON TEXT—I Peter 2:11-17; 4:1-5.
GOLDEN TEXT—Love worketh no ill to his neighbor.—Rom. 13:10.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Tells Us How to Behave.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Rules for Right Living.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Makes a Good Citizen.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Character of a Good Citizen.

In order to get an intelligent grasp of today's lesson, one must get a view of the entire epistle as to its purpose and method. The purpose was to establish all who were passing through suffering and testing (see ch. 1:7, 3:14, 4:12, 5:10-12).

The principles of Christian behavior set forth in the text of this lesson are of broader scope than citizenship. They embrace:

I. Behavior as Pilgrims and Sojourners (vv. 11, 12).
Christians are merely sojourners on the earth. They have not here their permanent home but are journeying through the earth on their way to the eternal home in the heavens. Our heavenly citizenship (Phil. 3:20) should constrain us to the maintenance of conduct consistent with our high calling.

1. Abstain from fleshly lusts (v. 11).
The term lusts includes the entire army of unclean forces springing from our carnal natures. They are enumerated in Gal. 5:19-21. These war against the soul. The Christian should not be under the sway of carnal passion.

2. Behavior as citizens (vv. 13-17).
While the Christian's true citizenship is in heaven he has a responsibility as a citizen on the earth.

1. Obey all requirements of civil rulers (v. 13).
Fidelity to Christ is shown by loyalty to civil authority. The intelligent Christian recognizes the necessity of government and graciously submits to those in authority over him regardless of the form of government. His duties as a citizen he performs as the Lord's free man—not through servile fear. Government even of a low order is better than anarchy.

2. Honor all men (v. 17).
He will see in every man the image of God and therefore give honor to him. This applies to all relations wherein we touch human life.

3. Love the brotherhood (v. 17).
The Christian has a peculiar love for those who are of the same household. The brotherhood is composed of those who are children of God by faith in Jesus Christ.

4. Fear God (v. 17).
5. Honor the King (v. 17).
This has a peculiar significance because in all probability the wicked Nero was then reigning as emperor.

II. Behavior in a World of Opposition (I Peter 4:1-5).
1. Armed for the conflict (v. 1).
Christians are engaged in a tremendous conflict with evil forces within and without. Satan and his angels are bent on the believer's defeat and destruction. The only way to keep from being overcome with his darts is to arm oneself with the mind of Christ.

2. The salutary effect of suffering (v. 1).
Suffering has a remedial effect upon God's children. The one who suffers with Christ as an example will have the consciousness that it is his identity with Christ that calls forth the opposition of the world.

3. God's will, the regulating force of his life (v. 2).
Not the lusts of the flesh, but the will of God is the directing force of his life.

4. The consciousness of a wasted life (v. 3).
Since the flesh has so long had sway over the life, God is entitled to the rest of the believer's energy. Looking back upon a wasted life in serving the lusts of the flesh will move one to give no more time to serving such a master.

5. The attitude of the world toward the one who separates himself from it (v. 4).
The world speaks evil of those who will not go its way. The world not only wonders at the life of the Christian who separates himself from its pleasures, but will heap upon him nicknames and reproach.

6. Account shall be given (v. 5).
The Christian should so live as to be able to render an account to God.

The Joy of Christ
O believer, the joy of Christ is within you; give it room, let it spring up within you like a well of living water, and you will rejoice in the Lord always, and again rejoice.—G. H. C. McGregor.

Praising God
When you find that a man has got to praising God it is a good sign. Oh, let us get to personal love, to personal praise! That is what is wanted in the church today.—D. L. Moody.

JUDGE SOWERS' WILL BEQUEATHS $300,000

Widow Receives Majority; Employees, Church, Relatives and Associates Are Remembered.

The majority of the late Judge Daniel H. Sowers' estate, estimated at $300,000, goes to his widow, Mrs. Mary Parsons Sowers, after 24 bequests have been made to other relatives, friends and local institutions, according to terms of his will, probated Tuesday with Judge Bostwick.

To St. Paul's Episcopal church, of which he was a warden, Judge Sowers left $25,000 to keep in repair the Elizabeth Deshler Sowers memorial organ and to purchase music for the church. The organ is a memorial to his first wife.

The will was made in February, 1926, and names as executor, John H. Summers, law partner of Judge Sowers for many years. Personal property was valued at $150,000 and real estate holdings totaled a like amount, according to the estimate.

The Big Sisters and Tuberculosis Society each benefited to the extent of $1,000. Dr. Andre Crotti was given $1,500 and John G. Deshler, $500, "to perpetuate the friendship which has existed so long among them."

Remembering employees who had been with him many years, Judge Sowers left to Mary E. Reed, $1,500; Hulda Leideger, Mollie Ludwig and Ralph Morris, $1,200 each; David S. Benbow, his associate in the Sowers-Benbow Lumber Co., $1,500, and J. Herbert Knecht, Los Angeles, former resident of Columbus, $1,500.

To his first wife's mother, Mrs. Mary E. Deshler, "who has been a real mother since the death of my own mother," Judge Sowers bequeathed $1,000, and to his second mother-in-law, Mrs. Harriett S. Parsons, Huntington, W. Va., he left $1,000.

Bequests to other relatives included $5,000 each to Emory B. Sowers, brother, and Mary S. Taylor, sister, and $1,500 each to his nieces and nephews, Lucy M. Notestine, Homer D. Broyles, Eunice Broyles, Elizabeth B. Guy, Harry S. Taylor, Edgar S.

Taylor and Joseph H. Sowers. Judge Sowers also left $5,000 to his son, David Deshler Sowers, "who was amply provided for by his grandfather," according to the will. His law library went to Mr. Summers.—O. S. Journal.

PERT PICKUPS

If a man wastes time he robs himself. No poetry that isn't thoroughly understood lasts.

A woman's tears float her out of a lot of difficulties. Don't let a bad habit get a mortgage on your life.

A heart full of grace is better than a head full of notions. Talk too much and people will heed very little that you say.

You never hear a man boast that his wife shines his shoes. Desk mottoes are a way of hanging your heart on your sleeve.

Wise is the man who has a cage ready for the bird in hand. Poverty chastens the soul, but being broke sharpens the wits.

If you must waste time waste your own. Do not waste other people's. After having his leg pulled the average man feels like kicking himself.

It is the easiest thing in the world to apologize when you are in the right. A defeated man may go to his grave in the sulks, but he won't if he can write.

If a man is no earthly good he is always asserting that he is as good as anybody.

Those who never preach don't care much for the welfare of their fellow creatures. We are awed most by the great when we see with what facility they sway the public.

For old men, playing golf is an exhibition that they have made a success of their life's work.

Fortunately all those who "have a better plan" haven't the capital to muss up the system with it.

For Woman's Protection

The custom of a man's walking on the side nearer the street when with a woman arose from the fact that in former times water and refuse fell from roofs and upper windows into an open ditch between street and sidewalk, according to Liberty.

THE OLD HOME ROAD.

(John J. Daly)

Some roads are invitations
Calling men to fields afar—
And other roads, repelling,
Keep most people where they areThere are high roads and low roads,
And open roads and closed—
And roads that hide by hillside
Where the dead have long reposed,
And roads that come to cities,
And roads that swing away
To the merry greens of villages
Where the little children play.There are dry roads and wet roads
That make you walk or run,
And roads that stretch like ribbons
O'er the mountains, in the sun.
There are roads that wind thru
valleys
Thru forests deep and cool,
Where the rippling, racing waters
Tumble to the sylvan pool.There are free roads and toll roads
You meet most ev'ry where,
And roads that hie to Happiness,
And roads that drive to Care.
There are roads that go a-rambling,
And, while all roads lead to Rome,
The best road in the universe
Is the road that runs back home.Unavoidable WasteAt least $5,000,000 a year goes down
the drains of London in the form of soapsuds. Fat or oil used in making soap is worth something like 10 cents
a pound, and owing to the fact that London's water is hard, each thousand gallons of it wastes 18 pounds of soap fat. It would not pay to attempt to recover this fat from sewage, yet there is no other way of saving it.3 BIG SALE DAYSWhite Bath room Stool $1.00;

Place by Action.Appropriation of $4500 for salary of the director of the division of
schools for the deaf, blind and crippled
children, state department of
education, was vetoed in the general
appropriations bill, it developed Wednesday.Mrs. Hazel Hadley, Columbus, has held the position of director of this
the only employees of the division.
The appropriation for the salary of
the assistant was not vetoed, nor were appropriations for salaries in any other divisions in the department of education with the exception of the State library.Mrs. Hadley's salary is $3000 per year and that of her assistant is $2000. The work of the division is supervising the conduct of local schools for deaf, blind and crippled children.Part of the expense of such schools is borne by the state and the remainder by Rotary clubs of the state. The work of Ohio is similar to that conducted by Rotary clubs in other states.J. A. Meckstroth, secretary to Governor Donahey, said that when the governor vetoed the item he believed the division could operate as efficiently under direction of an assistant as
under that of a director. His motive
Mr. Meckstroth said, was economy.Since that time, Rotary officials called on the governor and he told them he had no objection to the restoration of the item for Mrs. Hadley's salary if the emergency board
wanted to allow it, Mr. Meckstroth

most expensive fad of all. It is that fad was started by a blond actress of the Comedie Francaise, whose whims are adopted by many as fashion's law. Many rich women have taken up the idea with real jewelry,

but this vogue probably will be fol-
synthetic gems.Correct and AppreciativeGifts in Silver Tableware, Plates,

Portsmouth, May 17, last. The marriage was performed by Rev. L. Lin-denmeyer and the witnesses were,
and Miss Louise Bush, of Portsmouth.
The young people left this city Wednesday for Seabring, Florida, where they expect to locate.A highly respected woman, Mrs.
Rosa Martin, of this city, and Mr.
Charles B. Bateman, of Frankfort,
were united in holy matrimony at the Church of the Brethren parsonage,
Tuesday afternoon by the pastor,
Rev. A. G. Crosswhite, speaking the simple words that put the final seal
upon the life contract. Only a few
special friends witnessed the nuptials,
but a host of friends unite in "best wishes" for their future. Their place
of residence has not been fully decided upon.Early in the afternoon Tuesday
Rev. Crosswhite, pastor of the Church of the Brethren, was called from the central office here by parties from Delphi, Indiana, saying that they had arrived in the city and would be ready for a marriage ceremony as soon as it could be arranged.They had left Delphi at four o'clock that morning and were here a little after noon. Pretty good driving for
a Ford roadster—no, it was a Buick,
but it got them here just the same.
Twenty-five years ago while holding
a pastorate at Flora, Indiana, Rev.
Crosswhite had spoken similar words
for the bride's parents, Mr. O. A.
Trent and Miss Osta Wheeler, and
after serving several in different churches, widely apart, it was his
good pleasure and fortune to speak
the words Tuesday that joined in holy wedlock, their oldest daughter, Miss Thelma Trent and Mr. Paul Dickinson, both of Delphi, where they will reside. After a short visit with an old Peru girl friend here and an aunt at Delaware, they will return home by another route.Russia Has Lottery in*Which No One Is LoserMoscow.—Over $10,000,000 were subscribed in Moscow alone in seven days when the Soviet state lottery
loan was opened. This is an average of $5 for each inhabitant of the city.Besides the grand prize of $25,000, many hundreds of smaller rewards are offered for the holders of lucky numbers. In addition, every subscriber
will eventually recover his money, under the lottery rules, as the contribution is in the form of a state loan.
The tickets were sold on the installment plan, with six months in which to pay.In Leningrad and other centers the lottery loan was well supported but without the spectacular speed and volume which were its features in Moscow.Diet Makes Goldfish*Live for Twenty YearsLondon.—How long will a goldfish live? Any life insurance underwriter who was sufficiently enterprising would
quote a first-class goldfish's life
at from fifteen to twenty years,
providing the environment is suitable and if it is regularly
fed on ants' eggs and crushed
vermicelli and not on crumbs of
black beetles, according to aquarium authorities.The carp family, to which the goldfish belongs, is famous for longevity. There are carp in
the ponds of the Chateau de Chantilly in France which belonged to the Prince de Conde
and which are supposed to be
centuries old.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECTIn the death of Samuel Wesley Dunlap, the First Methodist Episcopal church of Circleville appreciates that is has lost a long-time, faithful
and devoted member; one, while health and strength permitted loyal

cherishing his virtues and member-

venerable and beloved wife, and to his family, our sincere sympathy in their bereavement.Resolved, that the secretary of the

ROSE TO FAME, BUT HAD UNHAPPY LIFEWilliam Cowper, the English poet, who died a century and a quarter ago,
had some unfortunate experiences in
his illustrious career. His mother died
when William was six years old, and he was placed in a boarding school.The homesick boy was oppressed to such an extent that his health
failed and he was taken home. That experience made him a bitter opponent of the educational system prevailing in England in his day. Cowper also was unfortunate in a love
affair because of the opposition presented by the girl's father.The girl was Cowper's cousin, and this and other considerations caused Ashby Cowper to decline to sanction
the marriage of his daughter, Theodora, to William. The tradition is that
to obey this injunction the young people sacrificed their happiness and never saw each other again.—Kansas

OF FRENCH KINGSWhether one believes that figures
never lie or that they may be manipulated to mean almost anything, it is curious to find a writer in Les Mots Croises busying himself with pointing out the following coincidences:Louis IX of France was born in 1215. If you take the trouble to add these four digits you will discover that the total, nine, equals the
came into the world in 1402. Addition discloses that the sum of your efforts
will match Charles' number in the succession of his name.Louis XIV began to reign in the year 1643 and this assuredly adds up
to fourteen; he was seventy-seven
years of age when he died and one gets fourteen points from the two sevens.

Light Bulbs

Before discarding an electric light bulb place it on a drop light, turn on the current and shake the bulb, holding it between you and the light. Then try it on the light; the chances are it may do service for several months longer. The fine wires of the filament have a habit of becoming disconnected. By shaking it the parts come together again, making the bulb as good as new.

WRITING PAPER ONCE CURRENCYMacerated Money Turns Out High Grade Pulp and Country Profits.

Washington.—As a further step toward economy in maintaining the large amount of paper money in circulation in the United States, the bureau of standards, in co-operation with the bureau of engraving and printing and the bureau of efficiency, has worked out a method of converting macerated currency into first-class writing paper.

The work was the result of experimentation which brought about the making of a harder and tougher currency paper so that dollar bills would last longer—not with the individual—but in circulation.

The experiments brought a vastly improved currency paper and now dollar bills have an average life of more than two years. This done, the process was reversed. Each day four tons of cuttings, waste and currency retired from circulation is macerated under the eyes of a board, the duties of which are to watch and see in the public interest that no bill condemned escapes the macerator and gets back into circulation.

De-Inking the Pulp.

The product of maceration was a relatively worthless pulp. It was sold to souvenir makers in relatively small quantities, to be made into souvenirs of Washington. It was sold as a mash containing 70 per cent water and all the ink.

No attempt is made to clean the pulp, the process being carried only far enough to comply with the requirements for protection against unlawful use of the waste paper; that is, that it be entirely debilitated so that no printed characters can be distinguished and that all distinctive features of the paper itself be removed.

In this form the pulp is suitable for coarse paper products only, such as certain grades of boards, owing to its large content of impurities in the form of lumps. For this reason the price received is so low that according to the survey by the board of efficiency, the maceration is costing annually from $15,000 to $18,000.

As the original paper is composed of the highest grade linen and cotton rag fibers, a clean pulp produced from the waste paper should have a ready market for fine writing and printing papers at a considerably increased price. It is estimated that by so improving the product, the present loss can be turned to a profit amounting possibly to $50,000.

How It Is Cleaned.

The material presents unusual resistance to the ordinary de-inking treatments, owing to hardness and toughness of the paper, the large amount of ink present and the resistant quality of the ink. It was found possible, however, to completely de-ink and otherwise quite thoroughly clean it with semi-commercial machinery consisting of a duster, a rotary digester and a beater equipped with a drum washer.

The paper produced from the pulp compared favorably with good grades of fine writing and printing papers. As is to be expected, considering the wear to which paper money is subjected and the weakening effect of de-inking and de-fibering processes, a large proportion of the original strength of the fibers is lost. The reclaimed fiber paper, however, is sufficiently strong for the purpose mentioned, being somewhat stronger than that made from new sulphite fiber and as strong as some grades of rag fiber papers made from lower grades of rags.

The results obtained are considered so promising that it is planned to purchase the additional commercial equipment for use in the recovery plant of the bureau of engraving and printing required to produce a clean pulp and to more thoroughly de-water it so as to lower the transportation cost of the product.

Cop Kills Dog

Portland, Maine.—Shot in a public park by a policeman, Aran Boyle Terry, Irish setter, whose ancestors were famous in Ireland's dog history, is dead. The policeman is under suspension. He insists the dog was chasing ducks.

Rare Suicide EffortWith Dynamite Fails

Shamokin, Pa.—Irvin Paul, forty-one years old, recently placed a stick of dynamite under his head and another under his feet, while he lay on the ground, touched a match to the fuse, and, although one stick exploded, lived to tell the tale. The stick of dynamite under Paul's head exploded while the one under his feet failed to fire.

"I've got a pretty good head, if a stick of dynamite won't blow it off," Paul said to attaches at the hospital where he was taken. He suffered severe lacerations of the head and face, a broken left arm and cuts and bruises about the body. He also was injured internally.

Hospital attaches believe Paul will recover, although it is feared he will lose the sight of his left eye.

AMUSEMENTS

A story that moves from the bucolic scenes of the French countryside to the more hectic scenes of a tinselled Paris affords Adolphe Menjou his latest dramatic opportunity in "Evening Clothes," now at the Met theater.

In the first reels of the picture, Paramount proffers a different Menjou, one who thru his remarkable versatility is enabled to discharge the exigencies of a strange role with the ease that has always characterized his past performances.

As the rustic Comte Lucien D'Artois who makes his farm and all its appurtenances his chief joy in life, Menjou is more than convincing. He discards his famous polish for the naivete of the country gentleman who sees the beauty of dawn not thru the mist of a night's revelry, but with the clear, appreciative eye of a man who goes early to bed and rises early. He sports a beard, his clothes never quite fit, and he has a keen enthusiasm. Besides his bride, just arrived from Paris, he appears uncouth, for Germains (Virginia Valli) has been worshipping the god of correctness in the Paris drawing rooms. She is distinctly city-bred and in marrying Menjou follows the decree of her parents, after the French custom. Her scorn of him is engendered on her arrival with her parents at his estate to find him out in his barn waxing enthusiastic over a new-born colt.

She leaves him, and he, realizing why, goes to Paris to make of himself a gentleman. The Menjou of the old time polish steps out of his country shell to delight eyes of the audience.

All attempts to interest Germaine fail however. She breaks the dinner engagement at his apartment when he is to prove to her that he has made himself worthy of her love. He turns to the gay life, and quickly dissipates his fortune. Menjou, always makes an intriguing failure. The subsequent complications in the plot afford him wide latitude for the subtleties for which he is famous. Luther Reed who directed Menjou in "The Ace of Cads" exploits the star's intelligence to the highest degree in "Evening Clothes." The sequences following Menjou's loss of all his property with the exception of one dress suit, bubble over with humor. Pathos is not forgotten. Things work out to Menjou's ultimate happiness, but the solution to all the difficulties is distinctly a new one.

Noah Beery as Lazarre shows a well-developed flair for comedy. The ever-pleasing Louise Brooks is not the least of the picture's attractions. She is cast as Fox Trot a pretty frequenter of the Paris cafes and night clubs.

MUSKETEERS

Play For Traditional Commencement Dance.

The Musketeers, direct from the Hotel Alms, Cincinnati, enroute to the Music Box Restaurant, Cleveland, Ohio, made famous by Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians, fortunately have been obtained to supply the music this year for the Circleville High annual commencement dance of the summer season.

This band has created an enviable reputation in Cincinnati and its environs, no less by its pep, than for its ability to put out real harmony and syncopation.

The beautiful sunken garden will be the scene of the merry-making Thursday evening at the C. A. C. gym, which has literally been transformed into a magic garden and it is hoped that all the friends of the class of '27' will avail themselves of this invitation to spend an evening so chock full of pleasure and delight.

Vitaglass in Greenhouse

To force an earlier start of his garden this year, W. Kerr Russell, M. B. D. S. of Edinburgh, planted seedlings under vitaglass in his greenhouse. He reported that the vitaglass plants germinated before the others and showed much taller and sturdier growth. Mr. Russell is part author of "Ultra-Violet Radiation and Actinotherapy." He suggests that greenhouses be equipped with vitaglass and that the glass would be especially adaptable in the raising of early strawberries.

BLOWITZ HID FACT OF JEWISH ORIGIN

Some curious things have come to light at the festivities of the unveiling of a memorial tablet to Henri de Blowitz, the famous London Times correspondent, Pierre Van Paassen says, in the Atlanta Constitution. The tablet was unveiled in his native village in Czechoslovakia. The schoolmaster of the village has been largely responsible for the whole affair. He showed guests a letter, written in French from Paris, in which De Blowitz seeks admission into the Roman Catholic church and expresses his desire to give a gift to the poor local church. The famous man, whose real name was Oppen and who came from Blovice, however, writes in his autobiography that he was a Catholic from infancy. He also starts his book with a reference to the chateau of Blovice, whereas the tablet was affixed to a little house in the square. His father was no lord of the manor, but a Jewish shopkeeper who at the same time acted as caretaker of the local synagogue. The boy, Oppen, was inscribed at the village school, as the present master showed, where he won a prize in 1834 for his proficiency in reading the Czech language.

THE OLD FRIENDS

There are no friends like old friends,
And none so good and true;
We greet them when we meet them
As roses greet the dew;
No other friends are dearer,
Thou born of kindred mold,
And while we prize the new ones,
We treasure more the old.
There are no friends like old friends,
Where'er we dwell or roam;
In lands beyond the ocean,
Or near the bounds of home;
And when they smile to gladden,
Or sometimes frown to guide,
We fondly wish those old friends
Were always by our side.
There are no friends like old friends,
To help us with the load
That all must bear who journey
O'er life's uneven road,
And when unconquered sorrows
The weary hours invest,
The kindly words of old friends,
Are always found the best.
There are no friends like old friends,
To calm our frequent fear,
When shadows fall and deepen
Through life's declining years;
And when our faltering footsteps
Approach the Great Divide,
We'll long to meet the old friends
Who wait on the other side.

Financial "Lame Ducks"

The term "lame duck" was not first used for those members of congress who failed of re-election. It was stock exchange slang and referred to one who was unable to fulfill his contracts or engagements.

Friends Hard to Find

Traded Shirt for Pearl

A white undershirt occupies a higher position in the eyes of natives inhabiting Penrhyn Island, which is near Christmas Island, far out in the Pacific, than does white man's money, according to Medford R. Kellum, who recently completed a two-year cruise of the South seas. Arriving at Penrhyn Island, Kellum offered a native several thousand dollars for a gorgeous "pipi" pearl. The native refused to consider selling his gem for mere paper, but accepted Kellum's white undershirt in trade and regarded his new acquisition as being well worth its cost to him.

Old Word for "Council"

Hustings is an Anglo-Saxon word, meaning "council." In Great Britain the hustings were the temporary platform on which the nomination of parliamentary candidates was made prior to the ballot act of 1872, and from which they addressed the electors.

QUALITY AT LOW COST

Make sure today, that you are using the right oil in your Ford.

Smoothness and economy depend upon the oil you use

Only a specially-compounded light-bodied oil—Polarine F—can give best results in your Ford. There are several reasons why this is so.

The Ford motor is a high speed motor and requires an oil which flows freely and quickly to all engine parts. It is a high compression motor in which carbon formation is more serious, hence an oil of low carbon tendency is required. Its bearing construction requires an oil light enough to penetrate quickly to bearing surfaces, yet of sufficient body to withstand heat and pressure. The splash system of lubrication is used, requiring a light-bodied oil which will atomize readily when splashed by the connecting rods.

Polarine F also has the second vital Ford oil characteristic. It keeps transmission bands soft and pliable—prevents chatter and grab.

Our recommendation of Polarine F for Fords is based on our own experience with these cars as well as the judgment of lubrication engineers.

Change crank-case oil every 500 miles and refill with Polarine F. For chassis lubrication use Polarine BB (for differential gears) and Polarine Cup Grease. These high-quality lubricants are available everywhere in Ohio to help you get best results from your Ford.

Rosa Accepted Tony's Offer

By AD SCHUSTER

(Copyright.)

"IT IS all right. Some day when I get a raise, be a little boss, then maybe, the big, you will be sorry you will not marry me." Tony drew himself up grandly that he might not show his disappointment. This Rosa thought of nothing but the motion picture and her little job in the store.

"And if I get married, Tony, it will be you. But you understand there are so many things to do, so many good times, that I do not wish to cook the dinner and wash the clothes even for you." She laughed at him and he thought, even in his anguish, that her eyes were like jewels.

"You laugh. It is all right. You see the picture and think you will be the actress. Perhaps not. The camera cannot put the sparkle of your eye on the screen and without the sparkle of your eye you are," Tony shrugged his shoulders, "not so very much."

That was the start of the quarrel. No one could tell Rosa who was earning twenty-two dollars a week and saving a whole dollar of it each Saturday in the bank, she was not so very much. If Tony would be jealous he would not call and then there would be so much more time for the pictures. There were better men, many better men than Tony, on the screen at the Acme theater. She would go there and snap her fingers and laugh.

The next afternoon there stopped in the store a man who took her to one side and explained she was violating a law. In amazement she listened to what he had to say.

"You are an alien and you are not twenty-one. You will have to go to night school until you reach that age." To make it strong he added, "I have informed your employer and if you do not obey you will lose your job."

When Rosa went to night school she passed the motion picture house and reflected upon her wasted opportunities. It cannot be said she was an apt scholar, for there was a rebellious gleam in her dark eyes and her thoughts were far away from her books.

"It is queer stuff you teach me," she protested, "can I sell gloves any better for knowing so much? You should be ashamed." The others laughed, but Rosa held her head high and considered herself a victim of injustice.

Though she would not learn from the books, the girl found out many things concerning the school, teachers and students. She reckoned the number of months she must attend these classes until she should become twenty-one, and her fine spirits drooped.

If they kept on putting stuff into her head, she decided, they would take the sparkle from her eyes. And Tony had said that without the sparkle she would be nothing. Tony? She would find him. She would see, somehow, that he met her on the street.

When the meeting took place, Tony was dressed in a new suit and stepping high.

"As I said it, I am the little boss. Pretty soon, maybe two years or fifteen, I will be the big boss. Now you are sorry you said you would not marry me."

"Tony, I didn't mean it. It was to make you jealous and propose all over again. I was going to say 'yes' next time you asked me."

Tony looked at her in surprise and again fell victim to the sparkle in her eyes.

"Then right now, I propose again, and what do you say?"

"I say 'yes,' of course," and Rosa took his arm, and as they walked down the street, kept looking up at him lest he be denied the treat of those eyes.

"These women," said Tony, "they don't fool me. It is because I have the better job, and you say 'yes.' Very well, I am satisfied, but not one bit fooled."

"And these men," thought Rosa, "they are so easy fooled. It is because a married woman does not have to go to school I accept him. But I am satisfied, too."

Before the Days of Steam Fire Engines

The first fire engines introduced into America were received at Boston from England, 248 years ago, January 27, 1679. This early engine was merely a strong cistern of oak placed upon wheels, and furnished with pumps, air chambers and a suction pipe of strong leather. The end for receiving the water was provided with a strainer.

In case the suction pipe could not be used, the water was supplied to the container by buckets passed from hand to hand. The labor of three men was required to work the plunger and direct the nozzle.

Few improvements were made in the methods of fire fighting until the middle of the last century, when steam fire engines were introduced, the first successful steam fire engine being used in Cincinnati in 1833.

CHEWING GUM DEARER THAN SCHOOL BOOKS

One Billion Dollars is Spent For Movies and Three Billions For Automobiles.

People of the United States spend many times more money on chewing gum, motion picture shows, radios and other luxuries and non-necessities than they do for school textbooks for their children, according to an educational survey just completed by the American Book company.

"Total sales of school textbooks by all companies last year amounted to approximately only thirty millions of dollars," the survey report showed. "This was only one-third as much as we expended on chewing gum, sales of which totaled more than eighty-seven million dollars."

"As compared with thirty million dollars for textbooks, Americans last year spent more than two hundred and fifty million for perfumes, approximately one billion dollars for motion picture shows, approximately two hundred million for radio sets, and more than three billion dollars for automobiles."

Approximately two thousand different textbooks were published in the United States last year, the survey showed, the American Book company alone having published enough books which, if laid end to end, would reach two thousand miles, or as far from Chicago to San Francisco. Approximately fifty thousand bound books are manufactured by this one company alone each day.

Statistics show, according to the report, that the American Book company is the oldest and largest manufacturer of school textbooks in the world, and that its ninety year history represents practically the span of educational development in the United States. American school books are internationally admitted to be the best and most highly developed in the world, the report showed.

Johnson's "Odd" Habit Proved His Greatness

According to the greatest of all biographers, Boswell, Doctor Johnson, upon entering a library, "ran eagerly to one side of the room, intent on poring over the backs of books, says a writer in "Private Book Collectors." Because of this custom a contemporary once called him "odd," to which accusation Johnson replied: "Sir, the reason is very plain. Knowledge is of two kinds. We know the subject ourselves, or we know where we can find information upon it. When we inquire into any subject the first thing we have to do is to know what books have treated of it. This leads us to look at catalogues and the backs of books in libraries." No wonder that such a man knew so well how and where to tap the sources of knowledge and give the world a great and unique dictionary.

Does the supreme court of the United States grant or deny applications for review in an arbitrary way, without any genuine examination into the particular merits of each application? According to a statement made by Chief Justice Taft the other day, just before leaving Washington for his summer home at Murray Bay, there is an impression more or less widely current that such is the case.

Naturally, the chief justice is unwilling that such an impression, once known to exist, should be allowed to go without denial. The thoughtful person will see at once that it contains an imputation against the court's conception of its official duty in the matter concerned. The court has a discretionary jurisdiction as to the granting of reviews, not being obliged to review any case simply because a request to do so has been made; but the decision in each case must be a matter of real discretion, not an arbitrary choice. There must be, and there is, a careful examination of the briefs, petitions and records involved in these matters of certiorari jurisdiction; and this examination, says Mr. Taft, "is not a mere superficial glance, but a real analysis of each case."

Every such case is called by the chief justice in conference, after the several justices have examined the briefs and the records, and their separate findings are discussed. A vote is then taken, and if four justices favor granting the review the writ of certiorari is issued. All this is just as it should be, and one may add that the names of the men who compose the supreme court should be taken by the public as a sufficient guarantee that these requirements of judicial propriety are not neglected.—Columbus Dispatch.

MUSEUM CURATOR TRACES DADDIES OF "WILD" HORSES

Tells of Antediluvian Steeds That Never Knew Bridle and Were Mysteriously Slain.

Washington.—Out in the West where they have roamed the ranges for years, wild horses are being rounded up for extinction.

These thousands never have known bridle nor rider and have obeyed only the laws of nature, but are not "wild" at all—in the scientific sense.

They're merely tame, domesticated equines "gone native," as it were.

Back long before the first red-skinned Americans made their appearance, this country was full of real "wild horses," ancestors of the western ponies now being caught for disposition.

These real wild horses had lived and died—killed off in some strange way unknown to science—in a geologic age antedating the human age.

Dr. James W. Gidley, assistant curator of vertebrate paleontology of the United States National museum, is just back from Florida, where he came across the bones of scores of these animals. The country is full of such fossils, he says, even as Europe and other parts of the world are.

"Geologic records show these earlier horses were far more numerous and diversified in kind than the horses of today," said Doctor Gidley, in relating their story.

Our own old dobbie is really an "import." His immediate ancestors were brought from Europe with the first Spaniards to visit this country, soon after Columbus arrived, and the European horses of that time came from an Asiatic stock, that, in turn, came from some species of this geologic wild horse.

Negroes' Ark Refuses to Float During Flood

Memphis, Tenn.—Exhorted by their parson, a community of negroes in the lowlands near Parkin, Ark., emulated the example of Noah when they heard the flood was approaching and hastily built an ark. Into the crude vessel they crowded themselves and all their worldly belongings, including chickens, dogs, cats and mules. While they waited for the flood they prayed and rejoiced.

The flood came, but the ark refused to float. Water poured in from a hundred leaks in the uncalked hull, and with the flood a foot and a half deep on the floor of the flat-bottomed craft its occupants fled to a railway embankment.

What One's Fiance Is For

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

TOM GILBERT was always thankful that he had been standing in the doorway of his shop when the incident, just outside, took place.

He watched the girl, as he had many times watched her, while she put a great bundle of magazines in the mail box which was on the sidewalk just in front of his shop.

While Gilbert gazed at her, quite satisfied with her from the tips of her well-shod feet to the mass of red-gold hair, his expression suddenly darkened.

He saw a good-looking man approaching the mail box, most obviously intent on a flirtation with the girl.

Gilbert never knew exactly how it happened, but what he did see was the bundle of magazines bumped out of the girl's arms and a swift stooping of both the man and the girl to pick them up.

Apparently their heads came into violent collision for the girl crumpled into an unconscious heap on the sidewalk.

Gilbert didn't like the look on the man's face as he picked the girl up. Without a moment's hesitation Gilbert rushed out.

"See here, what's happened?" he questioned belligerently.

The other held firmly to the limp form of the girl.

"This young lady, a friend of mine, has bumped her head, that's all—no need to make a fuss about it," he said.

The stranger relinquished his burden.

"Oh, that's a different matter," he said with assumed politeness, and escaped from the quickly gathering crowd.

Gilbert scattered them all and carried the girl of his dreams tenderly into the shop and from thence to the big living-room behind, where his mother sat.

"She evidently got a nasty bump," said Gilbert, and gazed anxiously at the fluttering eyelids of the girl. "I don't know whether that dirty dog who tried to claim her did it deliberately or not—it looked mighty suspicious," he growled.

"There, there," said Mrs. Gilbert soothingly. "Don't be judging the man too harshly. Now you run along and mind the shop—she mustn't be frightened when she comes around—by so many people."

"Many people! Just you and me!" laughed Tom, but he obeyed instructions after a lingering glance at her.

"You're quite safe, my dear," said Mrs. Gilbert. "You had a bump on the mail box and you are in the shop just beside it." Did Mrs. Gilbert fancy it or did a light flush stain the girl's cheeks at mention of the shop beside the mail box?

"You are a dear, and how horribly silly of me to bump my head. I think I can stand now." She smiled into Mrs. Gilbert's eyes. "I'm so sorry to have put you to this trouble."

"It was no trouble. I am just thankful my son was looking out the window and—well, my dear, he fancies he rescued you from the clutches of a flirt—but don't breathe a word to him about it."

The blush was very evident now and Tom burst into the room to make inquiries just when it was at its height.

"Well, what a change from the little Pale Face I carried in, mother," he said joyfully.

Peggy Underwood looked up and held out a slim hand.

"It was very, very kind of you, she said sweetly, with a swift shy glance at Tom. "And your mother has been so good to me. I am Peggy Underwood and have charge of the library just around the corner." She rose. "If you don't mind, I must rush back as there is no one in charge, but if I may I should love to come in this afternoon. I have an hour off at four."

And when four o'clock came Mrs. Gilbert bustled about happily making tea. She loved young people and only hoped that Tom and this lovely girl would find happiness together.

It was a wonderful tea party in the big living-room and, when some one entered the shop, it was Mrs. Gilbert who arose to attend.

The man who entered was the one whom Tom considered a cad.

"Oh—I have just come in to inquire after the young lady your son is engaged to," he said, and noticed the surprise in Mrs. Gilbert's face.

But she was quite equal to the occasion. "She is all right now, thank you, and is having tea with us. Oh, Peggy dear," she called out, and Peggy appeared at the door. "This is the gentleman whose head came into collision with yours—he has called to see how you are."

Peggy cast a swift glance at Tom, who had followed close on her heels. There was not the flicker of one long, silky eyelash as she said softly, "Well—that is what one's fiance is for— isn't it?"

And Tom exchanged a broad grin with the mail box outside.

Memorial Planting Planned At Harrodsburg, Ky., Friday, June 16.

Harrodsburg, Ky.—Bryan Station Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, Lexington, is to plant a memorial tree in Kentucky Pioneer State Park here, June 16, in honor of the heroes of Ft. Harrod, especially the women whose daring in going to the Bryan Station Springs for water, diverted lurking Indians from their attack, and saved the settlers.

The tree is to be taken from beside the spring, and is to be donated by W. C. H. Wood.

Bryan Station Chapter also has planted a large flower bed in the park near the cabin in which Abraham Lincoln's parents were married.

The tree planting program is to be independent of the ceremonies at the park on June 16, when the Old Ft. Harrod replica will be dedicated, together with the George Rogers Clark marker, placed by the Harrodsburg Woman's Club and the Colonial Gateways, given to the park by the Society of Colonial Wars, and the Colonial Dames in Kentucky, in recognition of the fact that Harrodsburg is the only colonial town in the state.

Shame on Him

A rather prominent member of the business women's section of the Woman's Department club was recently invited to a "shower" for a bride-elect. As she started from home with her gift (a waffle iron) carefully wrapped in a box, she met her next-door neighbor, a young former soldier. She playfully handed him the package and said: "Guess what I'm taking to the party." He felt it and replied: "So you baked a cake, did you?"—Indianapolis News.

Many "Black Fridays"

Black Friday is any Friday marked by a public calamity, as in England, by the advance of the Pretender to Derby (December 8, 1745), or by the financial panic of May 11, 1868, and in the United States by similar disasters in New York on September 24, 1863, and September 19, 1873. Good Friday is also termed "Black Friday" from the color of the vestments worn on that day by the clergy.

MUSKETEERS

Play For Traditional Commencement Dance.

The Musketeers, direct from the Hotel Alms, Cincinnati, enroute to the Music Box Restaurant, Cleveland, Ohio, made famous by Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians, fortunately have been obtained to supply the music this year for the Circleville High annual commencement dance of the summer season.

This band has created an enviable reputation in Cincinnati and its environs, no less by its pep, than for its ability to put out real harmony and syncopation.

The beautiful sunken garden will be the scene of the merry-making Thursday evening at the C. A. C. gym, which has literally been transformed into a magic garden and it is hoped that all the friends of the class of '27' will avail themselves of this invitation to spend an evening so chock full of pleasure and delight.

Vitaglass in Greenhouse

To force an earlier start of his garden this year, W. Korr Russell, M. B. D. S. of Edinburgh, planted seedlings under vitaglass in his greenhouse. He reported that the vitaglass plants germinated before the others and showed much taller and sturdier growth. Mr. Russell is part author of "Ultra-Violet Radiation and Actinotherapy." He suggests that greenhouses be equipped with vitaglass and that the glass would be especially adaptable in the raising of early strawberries.

Rosa Accepted Tony's Offer

By AD SCHUSTER

(Copyright.)

"IT IS all right. Some day when I get a raise, be a little boss, then maybe, the big, you will be sorry you will not marry me." Tony drew himself up grandly that he might not show his disappointment. This Rosa thought of nothing but the motion picture and her little job in the store.

"And if I get married, Tony, it will be you. But you understand there are so many things to do, so many good times, that I do not wish to cook the dinner and wash the clothes even for you." She laughed at him and he thought, even in his anguish, that her eyes were like jewels.

"You laugh. It is all right. You see the picture and think you will be the actress. Perhaps not. The camera cannot put the sparkle of your eye on the screen and without the sparkle of your eye you are," Tony shrugged his shoulders, "not so very much."

That was the start of the quarrel. No one could tell Rosa who was earning twenty-two dollars a week and saving a whole dollar of it each Saturday in the bank, she was not so very much. If Tony would be jealous he would not call and then there would be so much more time for the pictures. There were better men, many better men than Tony, on the screen at the Acme theater. She would go there and snap her fingers and laugh.

The next afternoon there stopped in the store a man who took her to one side and explained she was violating a law. In amazement she listened to what he had to say.

"You are an alien and you are not twenty-one. You will have to go to night school until you reach that age." To make it strong he added, "I have informed your employer and if you do not obey you will lose your job."

When Rosa went to night school she passed the motion picture house and reflected upon her wasted opportunities. It cannot be said she was an apt scholar, for there was a rebellious gleam in her dark eyes and her thoughts were far away from her books.

"It is queer stuff you teach me," she protested, "can I sell gloves any better for knowing so much? You should be ashamed." The others laughed, but Rosa held her head high and considered herself a victim of injustice.

Though she would not learn from the books, the girl found out many things concerning the school, teachers and students. She reckoned the number of months she must attend these classes until she should become twenty-one, and her fine spirits drooped.

If they got on putting stuff into her head, she decided, they would take the sparkle from her eyes. And Tony had said that without the sparkle she would be nothing. Tony? She would find him. She would see, somehow, that he met her on the street.

When the meeting took place, Tony was dressed in a new suit and stepping high.

"As I said it, I am the little boss. Pretty soon, maybe two years or fifteen, I will be the big boss. Now you are sorry you said you would not marry me."

Tony looked at her in surprise and again fell victim to the sparkle in her eyes.

"Then right now, I propose again, and what do you say?"

"I say 'yes,' of course," and Rosa took his arm, and as they walked down the street, kept looking up at him lest he be denied the treat of those eyes.

"These women," said Tony, "they don't fool me. It is because I have the better job, and you say 'yes.' Very well, I am satisfied, but not one bit fooled."

"And these men," thought Rosa, "they are so easily fooled. It is because a married woman does not have to go to school I accept him. But I am satisfied, too."

Before the Days of Steam Fire Engines

The first fire engines introduced into America were received at Boston from England, 248 years ago, January 27, 1679. This early engine was merely a strong cistern of oak placed upon wheels, and furnished with pumps, air chambers and a suction pipe of strong leather. The end for receiving the water was provided with a strainer.

In case the suction pipe could not be used, the water was supplied to the container by buckets passed from hand to hand. The labor of three men was required to work the plunger and direct the nozzle.

Few improvements were made in the methods of fire fighting until the middle of the last century, when steam fire engines were introduced, the first successful steam fire engine being used in Cincinnati in 1853.

CHEWING GUM DEARER THAN SCHOOL BOOKS

People of the United States spend many times more money on chewing gum, motion picture shows, radios and other luxuries and non-necessities than they do for school textbooks for their children, according to an educational survey just completed by the American Book company.

"Total sales of school textbooks by all companies last year amounted to approximately only thirty millions of dollars," the survey report showed. "This was only one-third as much as we expended on chewing gum, sales of which totaled more than eighty-seven million dollars."

"As compared with thirty million dollars for textbooks, Americans last year spent more than two hundred and fifty million for perfumes, approximately one billion dollars for motion picture shows, approximately two hundred million for radio sets, and more than three billion dollars for automobiles."

Approximately two thousand different textbooks were published in the United States last year, the survey showed, the American Book company alone having published enough books which, if laid end to end, would reach two thousand miles, or as far from Chicago to San Francisco. Approximately fifty thousand bound books are manufactured by this one company alone each day.

Statistics show, according to the report, that the American Book company is the oldest and largest manufacturer of school textbooks in the world, and that its ninety year history represents practically the span of educational development in the United States. American school books are internationally admitted to be the best and most highly developed in the world, the report showed.

The radio division of the Department of Commerce says that the radio listeners of a message being broadcast really get the message a fraction of a second sooner than the speaker can be heard by an audience, because electric waves travel faster than sound.
